

Episode 7:

After the fall of the empire, people tried to believe that the Force would guide them to peace. Instead, it ushered in more wars and tragedies. After a horrific event that caused the 'deaths' of heroes such as Han, Leia and Luke, the New Republic went into a panic and decided that the Force was to blame, and researched a new technique to cut off people from the Force. The Force was then forbidden from the galaxy. In retaliation, a rebellion emerged, but in-fighting over whether the Sith or Jedi should lead the cause made it split into multiple factions. Though many believed that the factions had to unite in order to stop the New Republic, as now they lacked the resources to fully defeat the New Republic, the in-fighting persisted. Still, the New Republic was unable to wipe out these terrorist factions due to their influential ideals and guerilla tactics, so they decided to quarantine them and move their territories away from their main regions. They knew that as long as the factions fought amongst themselves, they would not be able to rise against the New Republic. Strong barriers were built between the New Republic territories and the 'ghettos'.

Over time, the factions in the ghetto devolved into gangs, with two main ones: The hedonistic blood cult Blisith, and the ascetic Omni. Now, only the poor and Force sensitive lived in the ghetto regions; everyone else lived in the New Republic territories, where they were forced to have their connection to the Force cut off in order to join civilization. Both gangs would win over favors from communities by promising to protect them; but within the shadows, they would use their influence over the people for their own violent causes. They are also heavily involved in illegal trading and hitman jobs.

START OF MOVIE:

PART 1

In the ghettos, a young and lonely mechanic named Kira lives with her mean and strict guardians, who claim to be protecting her from gang violence by living in the 'good parts of the planet' that trade with merchants. These traders take the risk of leaving the New Republic in order to get rare valuables and resources found only in the ghetto regions. In exchange for a home, Kira works tirelessly, almost as if she was a slave. In secret, she dreams of joining the Omni, who look up to the Skywalker legacy. In her fantasies, Kira wishes that she's the daughter of Luke Skywalker.

PART 2

One day, the Blisith breach the protected gates and attack Kira's village. Caught in the middle of battle, Kira tries to hide, only to meet face to face with the feared and murderous Blisith sixth-in-command, Novak Krey. They only meet for one second before the Omni, lead by its fifth in command, come to save Kira from Novak. The Omni aim to seep their influence into village so that they could lure in new recruits. Both gangs seek to seize members, territories and resources to strengthen their terrorist attacks on the New Republic. An Omni vice leader, a charismatic, outgoing and friendly young man named Cliff, tells Kira that the Omni are here to protect the residents from the Blisith. He says the Omni have to fight the New Republic to let force users back in, but that the Blisith are doing it in the wrong way.

However, the residents of her gated community despise all Force sensitive users, as the merchants fear the Force and the only way the communities can live slightly better than the rest of the ghettos is by trading with the merchants. They tell the Omni that they see past their trickery and want them to leave.

As such, the Omni yet again fail to win over leaders of entire village, though they gain the admiration of many important young and naïve potential recruits. During the battle, Kira discovers that she may be Force-sensitive, but it's hard to tell, and no one else saw what she did (which was just an anticipation of something) and so they don't believe her. Kira begs Cliff to let her join the Omni, and Cliff happily lets her in, though only allowing her to be an 'ally', as a mechanic, since she hasn't shown Force sensitivity and thus can't be trained as a fighter. Kira's guardians rage at her and tell her not to go, but Kira refutes them and leaves anyways.

PART 3

During the battle, a Blisith thug named Sam develops sympathies for the village, as this is the first time he's attacked innocents who weren't part of a gang. He begins to question his loyalties. Sam was raised by his parents to be a Sith sympathizer, and when his father was killed by the Omni, Sam joined the Blisith. His mother is gravely ill, and Sam has to earn money through the Blisith to care for her. He is a wise cracking thief like Han Solo, and has dark skin with tattoos. He also become enamored with Kira, whom he saw from afar. Sam stops one of his own from attacking Kira, saying "there's nothing there" even though both he and Kira sense each other's presence. Novak silently notices something is amiss, and begins to keep a closer eye on Sam. Sam also jokes around with his best friend, a Blisith thug named Bryan.

Novak has a strange obsession with Kira. He is also shown to be deeply troubled and conflicted. He is constantly pushed down and outwitted by Raivana, a terrifying alien woman and Blisith's fifth in command, who sneers that he's not cunning enough. It is shown that there is unstable tension between Blisith's 8 vice leaders (called Vizars, or Viziers). The 2nd to 4th Vizars, along with the 7th, are not seen due to them having missions elsewhere, so Raivana has the most authority in the area at the moment. The 1st Vizar is Atrekulis, Blisith's top leader; Atrekulis resides in the main base, so he is not in the ghettos either.

PART 4

In the Omni controlled regions, Kira is fascinated by all the tricks that the Omni are performing. Despite this, she's still confined to being an overworked mechanic, and she begins to grow sad. She meets a frumpy mechanic named Rosalyn, who is also just an Omni ally because she is not Force-sensitive. Like Kira, Rosalyn is enamored by the Force. Rosalyn is talkative and fast to call Kira a friend, though Kira is more hesitant because she was a loner her whole life. Still, the two bond and grow close.

The Omni are very ascetic, and seem to have lost their ways from the Jedi. They are strict and hate attachments, swearing themselves to a blind religious cause. They believe the Blisith are wrong to give in to the dark side, as they believe the dark side will tear people away from a cohesive cause; on the other hand, the Blisith believe that the dark side is the natural way to live with the Force. Though the Omni admire Luke, they have not adhered to what he would have wanted, as he is not there to lead them to the right path of kindness and compassion. They only see themselves as holier than thou protectors, with goals much more important than non Force-sensitives' goals. They think that without light side force users, the galaxy will lose its way. They are elitist against non Force-sensitives, thinking of them as sheep that need to be herded and guarded. Due to their draw to glorious success, they are obsessed with self-flagellation and the punishment of others, and Kira despises this.

Like Blisith, there are 8 Omni vice leaders, called Crowns. Cliff is the Sixth Crown, and another is Julius, the Fifth Crown. The first to fourth are not seen. The eighth Crown is a jealous and insecure man whom the audience is meant to think is a traitor, but once the actual traitors are revealed, it's shown he's not and was just a red herring (the twists in this movie are not hard to figure out).

Omni leaders report a mysterious figure they were tracking, and claim they have to stop him because he poses a threat. They overwhelm him using a gigantic army, and to avoid showing his face, the man retreats and his plans (on an artifact) are taken by the Omni. However, the Omni are unable to decrypt what these plans were. Kira, fed up with being treated so lowly, sneaks in and realizes the plans are encrypted by a strange Force binding. Somehow, Kira is able to decrypt this artifact, and its plans are etched into her mind; then, the artifact self-destructs. The Omni walk in on her and are extremely angry, not believing her when she claims the artifact was encrypted by a strange Force technique. They think she failed and destroyed the disc, so they exile her. As a precaution, however, they prepare a mind wiping ritual on her (the result would be similar to a lobotomy), so they throw her in jail until the preparation is done. Cliff opposes them and tries to save Kira, but he is overruled.

PART 5

In prison, the strange robed man that the Omni were chasing breaks her out. During the run, Kira steals a lightsaber from an Omni who was a condescending jerk to her (the Omni is asleep during this). After the two escape, the man reveals himself to be Luke Skywalker. Luke tells Kira that he had been hiding from the New Republic, and has tried to quell tensions between the gangs from afar, but to no success. Luke had to hide himself from the Omni because he believes there are many traitors amongst their high ranks, waiting to destroy the Omni from within so that Atrekulis, the terrifying leader of Blisith, can take over Omni and bring back the Sith. If Omni was to discover that Luke was alive, the traitors would turn him over to Atrekulis.

The New Republic, after Luke's 'death', has now turned against Luke. They believed Luke failed, and now many hate the Force. Luke reveals that he did not fail, but was betrayed. Thus, Luke cannot reveal himself to anyone. There is a link between the gangs and the traitors now governing the New Republic.

Luke has a plan to discover the Omni traitors and defeat Blisith, and show the New Republic that the Force can do good. Luke tells Kira about Blisith's plans to circumvent the New Republic's barriers to commit terrorist attacks and have the New Republic leader bend the knee to Atrekulis. Luke has been secretly working to defeat Blisith by himself. Now that his artifact (stolen from Blisith) is gone, Luke must rely on Kira. But Kira tells Luke that though the information now lies in her subconscious, she is unable to access it. Luke tells her that it's because she has to be strong enough in the Force to be able to access and understand the information now in her mind. Luke says that if Kira was able to decrypt the artifact, she must be Force-sensitive (also, the information could only seep into the mind of a Force-sensitive user). So Luke tells Kira that he will train her. Finally, Kira gets her wish to be a Jedi and is overjoyed. She and Luke stay in hiding near the Omni territories, using techniques that conceal them from being found.

In addition to the Blisith plans, there is one hidden piece of the artifact that intrigues Kira. Luke says he doesn't know what this piece is, but he has a feeling that it is connected to him. However, this piece is so much harder to unlock, and is not the top priority now, so Luke tells Kira to deal with it later.

PART 6

During training, Kira has strange visions about a kind young boy. She also sees a motherly woman. Kira feels a familiarity. Then, a darkness. She feels an incredible pain and starts screaming. At the very last second, she sees Novak, but the two do not speak. Luke pulls her out of these visions just in time and is incredibly worried. Kira asks him who these people are, and Luke tells her to not think about that, as that will only lead to suffering and the dark side. Luke tells Kira that the young boy was Bailen, a student of his who betrayed the light. Bailen later grew up to become Novak, seduced by Blisith and Atrekulis. He was also Luke's nephew- Han and Leia's son. In her vision, Kira heard screaming, and saw Luke's students dying. Now that she knew Novak was Bailen, Kira believes Novak killed all those students. When she asks Luke if this is true, Luke won't answer. He just tells her to cut off those visions if she feels them starting again, and to not ask any more questions. Luke had been meditating since the tragedies to find out what he did wrong; now he believes he has answers, so he wants to forget the past and choose to do what he couldn't do before.

[There are no flashbacks with narration in this movie. Rather, the 'flashbacks' are all Force visions that the characters experience as bystanders, similar to how Bran sees the past in GoT. They are memories that the characters unlock and share with others, like the Pensieve in Harry Potter. The short revelations such as "you killed X" are not given visions, but are simply said, much like in the OT. The longer revelations are given visions, as having a character say it all in one long monologue is not as entertaining.]

PART 7

Meanwhile, Blisith seeks the one who stole their plans to attack the New Republic. They believe that Omni has them. In secret, Blisith leaders and the Omni traitors meet. The Omni traitors reveal that Kira has taken the plans, so they planned to mind wipe her (they couldn't kill her as it was against Jedi code). The traitors are robed and in masks. When Novak learns Kira was the one who stole the plans, he realizes this is the same girl he felt a strange connection with back at the village raid, and the audience is left wondering why he is so angered when he learns this. The Blisith and Omni traitors now set out to hunt Kira and the mysterious robed man, whom they suspect to be Luke Skywalker. They seek to kill Kira so the information dies with her, but some spies mention that Kira also has one more mysterious message stored within that is not a Blisith plan, but something else. They argue that they should extract this message somehow before killing Kira, though some argue that it is too risky to capture her, and it is not worth it just for some message that may not even help the Blisith cause. Sam, who accompanies them to stand guard, sneaks in when he gets bored and tries to pocket some illegal resources, and overhears this conversation. He doesn't manage to get the resources, but now he is worried about Kira, the girl whom he met for a few seconds and was enamored by.

Just then, he is confronted by Novak. Novak reveals that he sensed a disturbance within Sam, which is why he chose Sam to accompany him to test his loyalty. Now, seeing that Sam disobeyed orders to go steal resources, he discovered that Sam's loyalty was truly failing, and thus Novak uses this meeting as a way to guilt and intimidate Sam against further disobedience. Instead of killing him, Novak gives Sam a job, since it is an important one that no one else but Sam can do. He knows Sam is the only pilot in Novak's branch (each of the leaders has their own branch of subordinates) skilled enough to navigate through the Anyone Belt (Novak predicts that whoever stole the plan will head to Jaggerath, a Blisith controlled planet, and thus they must pass through the Anyone Belt during its most dangerous time, which is when security is most lax; Novak saw the robed figure's piloting skills and knows that figure is skilled enough to do this), and that his mother is dying from an illness. Novak tells Sam a secret piece of information- in the New Republic, deep in the protected realms, there is a rare cure for this disease. But it is only reserved for the wealthy and royal, so Sam's mother would never get it. But by infiltrating the New Republic territories, Novak can steal this cure and save Sam's mother. Sam is astonished as he had been searching for a way to save his mother for years. Novak tells Sam that if he brings Kira to Blisith, he will get the cure just for him. Sam reluctantly agrees, and is sent on a secret mission to capture Kira. Just before they depart, Novak orders Sam to capture Kira alive.

The Vizars have quarrels with one another, and each want their own branch to succeed. In secret, they compete with one another to win approval of Atrekulis, so he can give them more power. Thus, unbeknownst to the other Vizars, each branch leader sends their own hunter to track Kira. Only one hunter is sent because if word gets out about who the hunters are, the other branch leaders will sabotage the others' plans. One hunter makes it more covert. Though the 7 vice vizars are not all seen, they each know about the stolen plans, so by remote orders, they each send a hunter to lay in wait for Kira to fall in their trap (all know she will pass through the Onyone Belt; when she'll do so is unknown). The entire army is hunting Kira, but it is a secret up top that she will find her way to Jaggerath, as the location of the final plan is kept a high ranking secret. So the plan to wait until she figures out she has to go to Jaggerath (and thus cause her to run into a trap where her location will be known) is a secret one.

Novak meets with a projection of Atrekulis, who senses inner conflict within the Blisith Vizar. Atrekulis also says that he has felt the resurgence of a presence he'd lost long ago- that of Luke Skywalker, who has now reconnected more strongly with the Force in order to act out the final parts of his plan. Atrekulis believes Kira has found Luke, and the two seek to disrupt Blisith's plans to attack the New Republic. Novak swears he is loyal and will capture Kira- and even kill her, if need be (though this is in the worst case and Novak manages to convince Atrekulis that the 'hidden message' may help Blisith). Atrekulis listens to Novak logically, but treats him lowly and mocks him for what he senses may be a pull to the light; Novak angrily refutes this and Atrekulis laughs, indicating that Novak may not actually feel this pull and Atrekulis is only using this to taunt Novak and make him more determined to prove himself. Atrekulis doesn't know Kira's true identity yet, but finds it curious that she has been drawn into this conflict. In Episode 8, he focuses on finding out her true past, and Novak can't stop him when he does.

PART 8

During training, Kira shows a hint of the dark side of the Force, and Luke is afraid. He ends their sessions early. Kira is angry at Luke for not letting her reach her full potential, and for not giving answers. But she tries her best to follow his teachings, as she wants to be a true Jedi. Kira wonders why she did not display force tendencies when she was younger- it was as if some binding, similar to the one on the artifact, was hiding her powers away. And now, with Luke, they were slowly being released. This is a mystery that Luke won't explain to her, either.

As time passes, Kira is pulled more and more into these visions with Novak. Frustrated with Luke's lack of answers, she engages with Novak in conversation. Kira is always angry at him in these visions, yet feels that deep down, he can change. She tries to fix him, reminding him that he was once Bailen. Novak angrily lashes out against this, telling her that Luke is to blame. Kira asks why, but Novak says that deep down she knows, and she won't believe him unless she discovers the truth for herself through her visions. Kira now believes these visions may be repressed memories, but whose? She begins to hear a voice, and learns more and more about the young boy, who is meek and shy, and loves the creatures of the grassy planet. He also likes to stay indoors with the motherly woman, who is caring for an infant. In another vision, Kira sees herself as a young child screaming for someone while her guardian pulls at her; this mystery person has left on a ship. This is a memory she has fresh in her mind that she sees in her nightmares. Then the visions begin to get more and more disturbing. Kira hears the screams of many people, including Luke. Eventually Kira falls in too far, lured by a voice. Within her vision, she meets Novak just a few inches away from her face. He begins to reveal more and more about the truth to her, but there is something painful that he is hiding. Kira deduces that the motherly figure is Meira, Luke's wife. Kira never asked if she was truly Luke's daughter, as she didn't want to know and would rather live in her delusions that she was. Later in the vision, she sees Meira dead on the ground, killed by a dark force. She is angry at Novak and thinks he killed her, but something in her makes her think that's not true. In fear, Kira wants Novak to admit that he killed her, but Novak won't give a straight reply- he tells her to 'search deep within; you know the truth'. The vision ends.

PART 9

Several weeks pass. Kira has unraveled more and more of the plan in her subconscious, but there's still a final piece of the plan missing that's not in her mind, so she tries to deduce where it's located, and finds it's on the planet Jaggerath. Meanwhile, there are many territory disputes going on between Omni and Blisith (these are not explored in detail until Episode 8). Lots of political scandals and backstabbing. The Omni traitors' identities are slowly being unraveled. Luke and Kira learn that the Blisith had truly infiltrated Omni and planned to use the Omni's obsession with elitism and punishment against them. The Omni's beliefs would be their own downfall. With the Omni weakened, the Blisith would be able to control their resources, enough to attack the New Republic.

Rosalyn, with a small droid ZO-30 (whose name is intended to be obnoxious in an exaggerated way to the audience, mirroring how BB-8's name was made to be obnoxiously cute to sell toys), wanders out at night to look for Kira after she's reminded of her and feels lonely, and Kira saves her from Blisith thugs. With nowhere to go now that Rosalyn knows Kira is with Luke, Rosalyn and ZO-30 join the two (they prove useful in tinkering with a ship to get them through the Onyone Belt). The group heads to planet Jaggerath, a completely Blisith-controlled territory, to uncover the final parts of the Blisith plan. The hunters track them from afar, not knowing where they're going but seeing them take off. Luke pilots the ship through the Onyone Belt, an artificially-made belt (it's a very ancient structure from thousands of years ago, built by a mysterious civilization). Sam notices the faint signs that he is not the only one following Kira. He deduces that there are other hunters tracking her, so he becomes determined to get to her before they do. At the last moment before takeoff, Sam's ship breaks down. He's forced to steal a broken aircraft in a nearby merchant post- the Millennium Falcon. Sam pilots the Falcon and passes the Onyone belt.

PART 10

In the shadows, the hunters slowly try to capture Kira, but Luke is able to stop a few one by one [The atmosphere is like the movie Alien]. The hunters, due to their selfish desire to be the one to capture Kira, also attack and subdue other hunters. Kira manages to clash with some, but loses due to her inexperience (and she's yet to be connected to the power that's been suppressed within her) so she is forced into hiding. The most terrifying hunter is about to get to Kira, but someone pulls her into a hiding spot. This person is shown to be Sam. Sam was having a crisis about what to do, but ultimately decides that he can't hurt an innocent girl. The two are forced out of the ship and must run to the Falcon to survive. Once on the Falcon, the same hunter follows them on board. The two try to escape, and just when the hunter finds them, someone shoots the hunter, causing it to run at the new person on board. The hunter is shot to death, and from the shadows, Han and Chewbacca are seen. Han tells them that he and Chewbacca were out in hiding from the New Republic, as they feared his ties to the Skywalkers. He then says he heard the Falcon's signal, indicating it was back on, and risked going out of hiding just to get his favorite ship back. Kira tells him that Luke is alive, and Han is surprised. She tells him about Luke's plan. But during the scuffle, she and the rest of the group were separated and can't communicate; now, they have to follow their agreed upon infiltration plan and hopefully meet up at the agreed upon location. Kira has her own role to play, but doesn't have Luke to guide her.

Sam and Han butt heads due to their arrogant personalities. Kira is also wary of Sam due to his Blisith allegiance, not sure if she can trust him. To win her trust, Sam reveals that he took on this mission only to help his dying mother. Han thinks of a way to find the cure, and he thinks of a very risky plan that just might work. Sam is determined to make that plan succeed; but first, they must defeat Blisith and the Omni traitors so that they can win over the trust of the New Republic.

PART 11

The group sneaks onto Jaggerath. Han and Luke meet up, and a warm reunion is seen. The two dress up as Blisith thugs wearing masks, reminding them of when they first infiltrated the Death Star. During the mission, Sam tries to hide his feelings from Kira, and Kira shows that she's a bit smitten with him, too. As in the ghettos, Kira's aggressive nature leaks out, and she goes berserk in battle several times. Sam is shocked when he sees this, and tells Kira that he admires her a bit for this. Kira smiles at first, but shakes her head frantically because she realized she went against Luke's teachings. Determined to be a Jedi, Kira tries to swear off her dark side tendencies.

Sam meets his friend Bryan, who is hurt that Sam turned against them. Sam nearly joins Bryan to swear back his loyalty with his friend, but something interrupts them, so it's not known if Sam would take the plunge or not.

On Jaggerath, after the group manages to get through the security hole during the small window it's vulnerable (this involves narrowly flying through the treacherous Onyone Belt), Blisith leaders and Omni masked traitors follow through because the hunters failed their covert mission (which would've saved resources and time, as the leaders had other stuff to take care of); however, they managed to find their location. Kira briefly meets with Novak, who hurts her to try to enrage her, though she just runs from him; after cornering her, Novak uses a technique to forcibly read her mind. After obtaining all the information he needs from her (Novak is surprised to learn that Han is alive and on Jaggerath), Novak does not need her anymore, and Kira thinks he is about to kill her. She tries to fight him off, and just when he is in a prime position to kill her, Novak stops. Kira is astonished. Novak tells her to join the dark side instead, and Kira refuses. Still, to her surprise, Novak doesn't kill her when she fights back. It is not much of a fight; Novak does not beat her down, but rather stops her like how someone would stop an ant from moving in place. Kira is startled that Novak senses she has a pull to the dark side, and now realizes there's something more about HER past that Novak knows (before, she was only talking to him about HIS past). Just then, Sam makes a surprise attack and shoots at Novak, allowing Kira to escape. Novak is angered at Sam for disobeying, saying his mother will die now. Sam's mother's location is supposedly hidden from Blisith, so Blisith can't immediately kill her. After getting to a safe spot, Kira tells Sam that they'll go back to the planet and get his mother. A blockade prevents Novak and many others from reaching the group.

Eventually the group succeeds in getting the plans, but at a great cost: in order to survive, Kira had to forgo her Jedi ways and become aggressive. In her rage, Kira kills a young and unarmed Blisith thug surrendering and begging for his life. The thug is no threat to anyone, but Kira is so angry at other Blisith for badly harming Rosalyn that she doesn't care. A disarmed Sam tries to stop Kira, but Kira pushes him out of the way and nearly kills him. Rosalyn is saved from the Blisith, but now she is trembling at the sight of Kira. Realizing what she had done, Kira is scared of herself, too, and doesn't tell Luke what happened, as she did what he told her not to do. Sam distances himself a bit from Kira, and doesn't talk to her. Kira feels guilty for endangering his life.

The group learns that Blisith found a way to use the Omni's beliefs against them and at this very moment, planned to enact a plan to take over the Omni's resources. The group is too late; the Blisith attack the Omni and severely weaken them. An Omni traitor takes off his mask in front of Kira and Rosalyn, revealing himself to be Cliff; he is actually the Blisith's fourth in command, a secret that only the third in command and above knew about (all lower ranks thought the fourth Vizar was just 'faraway on an undisclosed mission'). Cliff reveals himself because the attack requires evidence that only Cliff and a few other higher ups knew, plus additional info clearly pointing to Cliff, so now they know he was the traitor all along and there's no use in hiding it. He calmly and smugly tells Kira that he could not sense her force abilities before, but to his genuine surprise, he can now. Now controlling Omni resources, the Blisith are strong enough to attack the New Republic barriers. They had already found a hole in the New Republic's security, and with a small window of time to exploit the security (and before the Omni could recuperate), the Blisith immediately attack the barriers, staged on a core planet.

Though the group failed at stopping the attack, they managed to find valuable information on Jaggerath that would help them defeat Blisith's attack. The New Republic does not know this information, so it's up to the group to stop the Blisith.

PART 12

The group rushes to the core planet controlling that segment of the barriers. But now that Kira's mind is troubled, her visions get worse. On the ship, Kira finds herself more drawn to Novak, as he has answers that she lacks. Fearful and unstable, Kira retreats more to him, as she feels like she doesn't belong with the good people. In one final vision, Kira sees the young boy in the house again with Meira, but now the vision is expanded to reveal who Bailen was talking to- a young girl, Luke and Meira's daughter. The two play together with the creatures Bailen brought back to the house, while Meira smiles at them. Kira's wish to be Luke's daughter is finally real, but Kira does not feel joy from this. Trembling, Kira demands Novak tell her who the young girl is. He then insists that she knows who the young girl is, but Kira is too afraid to admit it. Novak says she doesn't want to know because she knows the young girl is her- and that she was the one who killed her mother. Finally, all of Kira's temptations to go to the dark side are explained. Novak tells her that if she wants to truly find who she is- as Luke's teachings have been very incompatible with her so far- then she must head to him.

Believing herself to be a danger to the group, and fearing what would happen if her father found out she disobeyed him, Kira takes an escape pod to meet Novak. The group desperately tries to find Kira. Sam reveals to Luke that Kira hurt him. Luke is somber and senses what Kira knows and has done. He then says he has to reveal something about Kira that he did not want her or anyone else to know, for their own safety. The scene then cuts to Kira and Novak.

The 'cousins' finally meet in person again, and the two talk on Novak's personal ship. Novak reveals that both he and Kira, whose real name was Berusha, were naturally drawn to the dark side as children. He summons one last vision that unlocks some of Kira's deepest memories (though as seen in Ep8, not fully). As a child, Bailen was shy and was mocked by the other students in Luke's academy. This caused Bailen to lash out against them and he nearly choked one of them to death. Luke hated the dark side so much that he put restraints on the two. The restraints felt suffocating, and Bailen began to doubt Luke. On the other hand, Meira was a descendant of powerful Sith acolytes, and had secretly been training under Vader. After she met Luke, she was converted to the light, and left her old ways behind. However, her old tendencies remained, and she would remember them fondly from time to time. When Bailen was unleashing his anger, Meira taught Bailen to not be afraid of the dark side, though to never fully embrace it. Meira said to Bailen that a balance could be achieved, just as she had found inner peace with her own conflict- though this was something Luke did not believe in. Luke wanted to train the two to resist the dark side. But what he did not know was that with the Sith gone, a horrible new phenomenon was now appearing in which force sensitive users would hunger for the dark side as if it was water. This contributed to the rise of the hedonistic Blisith.

One day, when Bailen believed Luke was away, Berusha couldn't deal with the restraints anymore, and her power grew so much that she broke the inhibitors. Deprived of her tendency for months, Berusha was now thirsty for the dark side (though in Ep7 it's not revealed that the reason she was so 'thirsty' was because of these restraints; in Ep7 Kira and Novak think she would've naturally had to unleash this, and Luke was 'keeping this away' by using the restraints. Novak, on the other hand, thought there was another method to quell this, but it required tapping into a dark side technique). The young girl lost control of her mind and blindly attacked the students, killing them all. She brewed up a storm that devoured all in its way, and according to Bailen, accidentally killed her own mother. The young girl then fell into an unconscious state. Bailen saw this, and believed that the two could not stay with Luke any longer- he was suffocating their need to be with the dark side.

He ran away with Berusha, and he hid with her in a poor planet. From what Bailen learned from Meira, once Berusha woke up from that 'terrible storm', she would not exhibit her lust for the dark side and would lose her memories, so Bailen felt it was safe leaving her on the door step of an orphanage in the 'good parts' of the ghetto, while he could not live in such a place since he lusted for the dark side. Just as Bailen was leaving, Berusha woke up, but did not remember who Bailen was- she had lost all her memories. Soon after, Luke was 'killed' in a tragedy, causing the New Republic to ban the Force. Angered, Bailen joined the rebellion, and later joined the Blisith faction. To show Blisith that he was no longer the Jedi he was trained to be, and to protect any investigation into what happened to Berusha, Bailen lies and says that he was the one who killed all of Luke's students- including Berusha and Meira. Atrekulis is the only one who knows Bailen is not telling the truth, but he accepts him anyways because he feels the darkness in his heart. He knows that in time, Bailen can truly give up the light; but he must face a task of killing his closest loved ones to fulfill this. The shared force vision ends.

Kira is now totally lost, but trusts Novak completely. She follows him in the ship to a dark room, and from there, she is rendered unconscious by one of his force techniques.

PART 13

The Blisith, who have now conquered all of the Sith-like gangs, are now attacking the New Republic. With the combined resources of Omni and Blisith, they are overwhelming the fleet, as they have set up barriers to prevent the rest of the New Republic army from getting to the weak point they're infiltrating. It is also a surprise ambush, meaning the New Republic is unprepared and not used to dealing with all the new tactics and techniques Blisith has developed. A horrifically large weapon, which would one shot the New Republic, arrives on scene. It is a secret weapon created through a combination of Blisith sorcery and Omni magic. Luke is forced to use all his might to hold it off himself, and is locked in a frozen position trying to use the Force to push the weapon away. Thus, he is separated from the rest of the battle. A large battle ensues, and the group is trying to aid the New Republic, which distrusts them and thinks they are the enemy. All hope appears to be lost.

To her surprise, Kira awakens on a Blisith territory, in front of Raivana. Novak had betrayed her. Novak tells Kira that Bailen was long gone, and that he served only the dark lord Atrekulis. What he told her was the truth, but he feigned caring for her to lure her into a trap. Kira can't believe Novak. Why would Blisith still need to stop her plans from getting anywhere anymore? She failed to uncover Blisith's plot in time to allow Omni to stop Blisith and find the traitors. Raivana reveals that Blisith may have finally attacked the New Republic, but there was still something in those plans that was valuable. Something she won't tell Kira. Kira laughs at her and says that though she managed to access 95% of the data, she can't access this final 'hidden' data that she didn't know existed, so no one can get it. The Blisith fifth-in-command smirks, and orders Novak to forcefully extract the data from Kira using a Blisith decrypting technique the Omni did not know of. The technique would cause the person holding the data within to die. Fearful, Kira watches as Novak breaches into her mind. She screams, and the Blisith fifth-in-command laughs. But just then, as Novak looks deeper into Kira's memories and into her eyes, something comes over him. Memories of the time he had with her. The entire time, Kira is trying her hardest to resist and to reach out to Novak.

Suddenly, Novak uses a surprise attack to kill Raivana (who was shown to be far stronger than Novak during the entire film), and Kira force grabs her lightsaber. Using information learned on Jaggerath, Kira does something on the Blisith fifth in command that breaks down the control of many of the weapons in the assault on the New Republic barrier, and many super-weapons, including the one Luke is fighting. This also returns power to the Omni base, and now the remaining Omni thugs hyperspace jump into the battle and fight against the New Republic. The Omni begin to realize their mistakes which led them to their downfall (the elitism blinded them to believe force sensitives over those who weren't, causing them to not see the traitors standing before them despite evidence); their behavior was not in the footsteps of Luke Skywalker, who would show compassion and understanding for all. To rectify for this, they place capable non force-sensitives in charge and actually listen to their helpful advice on how to fight the Blisith. They also discovered who the traitors were when the Blisith attacked them, so that problem is gone now. They have an uneasy temp alliance with the New Republic, as the enemy of my enemy is my friend. The Omni are ecstatic when they see Luke.

The tide of the battle has now changed. Luke gets in his X-wing (R2D2, who was property of the New Republic and now is reunited with Luke at this point of the battle) and along with Han and Sam (with Rosalyn and ZO-30 riding as a mechanic in the Falcon), the group fends off Blisith ships, heading towards one of their weak points. The New Republic finally sees Luke has returned and is helping them. Though the generals distrust him, the soldiers secretly are happy that Luke is back and have no choice but to accept his help anyways. Luke realizes he has put himself in danger since the New Republic has traitors who seek to apprehend him, so he sacrifices his safety in order to help protect the very government that is hunting him down.

Meanwhile, Kira and Novak fight off an army of elite Blisith guards, but Kira is having trouble. Novak tells her that she must unleash her dark side. Kira doesn't want to. Just then, Cliff enters, and if he defeats Kira and Novak, he will be able to reactivate the superweapons on the New Republic attack. Novak now learns Cliff is a traitor, but he does not lose his cool. Cliff duels both Novak and Kira at once. Again, Kira is struggling, but the more she sees Novak losing, the more she taps into the dark side. Each time she does, she gets better and better, and soon is able to decently keep up and not need Novak to protect her; she is able to protect him a few times from Cliff instead. When Cliff holds Novak over a pitfall and electrocutes him while holding off and electrocuting Kira with his other hand (separating them away from one another), Kira is forced to unleash her full power against Cliff, and together, the two bring him down. Cliff falls into the pit.

Bryan is in another ship and flies against his former friend; when Bryan is locked on right behind Sam, who's near the weak point, Sam thinks he has to sacrifice himself (staying to shoot the only chance he's got instead of getting out of the way), but Bryan is shot down by Han just as he was about to fire on Sam (Bryan survives). Finally, Sam manages to hit the weak point and save the entire New Republic. The New Republic soldiers cheer, not knowing that a former Blisith thug was the one who saved them. They also see that the Omni, Force-sensitives whom their government has hunted down, were instrumental in their victory. Finally, they see that Luke has returned. There is much confusion, and a mix of gratitude, elation and distrust.

PART 14

After Kira and Novak defeated the auxiliary base's reigning leaders (the fifth and fourth-in-command), and they escaped on Novak's ship. Since Novak has betrayed Blisith, he can never go back. He and Kira don't know what to do. Just then, Kira (after having unleashed her dark side) is able to unlock the final piece of what the fifth-in-command wanted from her (she wouldn't tell Novak what it was). Kira and Novak learn that this final piece of the puzzle led to Leia, who was alive. Novak, now learning that his mother did not die, is in disbelief. The two share access to the vision and together, they see her message: Leia has learned of a horrible secret that ties the New Republic and the force gangs together in a dark history. But she doesn't know the whole truth yet, and is now in hiding to try to find it. Leia thinks Han is dead and though she senses Luke somewhere, both she and Luke have made their connection to the Force very weak to prevent being tracked. She couldn't tell Luke where she was going because she says this was something "she had to do alone and which Luke couldn't know about". Leia then says that she left this message because though she was fine before, now trouble has arisen- and she is sending this message to Luke Skywalker, to hope that he would find it so that he can help her (even though before, it was too risky for him to come; now, Leia is taking that risk).

It is revealed that Luke DID receive the message, but did not know who it was from because he could not open it. It was intercepted by someone mysterious, and this person had encrypted the message. Luke had just obtained the encrypted message, downloaded it into his artifact that also contained the Blisith plans (this was the only artifact he had as these items are very rare) and was trying to open it when the Omni attacked him, and he had to flee and leave the artifact behind.

Kira and Novak now realize that something is amiss with all 3 sides, and something has to be done to find the truth. Novak also wants to find his mother, whom he thought was dead. Kira wants to contact Luke to tell him about Leia's message, but Novak hates him. So he leaves her and goes to find Leia by himself.

Kira returns back to the group, and is reunited with Luke and the rest. She hugs Luke, and he apologizes to his daughter. She decides she'll wait after this reunion to tell him what she heard. Sam, not saying a word, also hugs Kira, and everyone gets along again. Standing in the aftermath of the battle, the group is amongst a triumphant army, with Omni thugs and New Republic soldiers cheering as one (despite being enemies before). Luke asks the New Republic to let him and the Omni in, and though reluctant, the New Republic leaders now see that the Force may yet again be wielded for good, so they vote to let Luke in to see what he has to say. C3PO appears at the gates to greet Luke and the rest of his old friends. The Omni apologize to Kira, and Julius welcomes her in as an official member. She gets to keep the lightsaber she stole since the original owner now has a new one he likes better.

Kira, who lived her entire life in a ghetto, sees the grand, welcoming light of the New Republic territories for the first time. She walks into the light, not sure of what will transpire in her new adventure.

Descriptions:

- Gangs: Lightsabers are reserved for the high-ranking elites, since kyber crystals are now very rare. Most thugs fight using ranged weapons and "xeon daggers", very similar to modern combat. Most thugs also behave like soldiers and assassins instead of knights. Most gang members, even high-ranking ones, are very young and full of aggression. The top leaders, however, are old and intimidating.
- Blisith: A derivative of the Sith, they are a hedonistic cult with a hint of Slaanesh. Its members dress loosely and behave wildly. They have shemagh scarves, dressed in black, purple and red. Images of dancing, hookahs, and drugs are prominent. The music has an fast paced Arabic feel, with shrill and powerful female vocals like in Wardruna and an orchestral/trap mix like in Black Panther. Shrill violins, mixed with ones like in pirates of caribbean? Gypsy aesthetic? Notable Members: Novak, Sam, Cliff, Raivana (fifth in command).

- Omni: They are obsessed with hard work and success. Its members are buff and intimidating like pro athletes. They walk with pride and elitism, and are surrounded by ego boosting insignias and gear all over. They dress loosely, like tropical kings. They also specialize in many custom classes, having rigid battle plans and formations. They have shemagh scarves, dressed in piercing white with only faint hints of blue and green patterns. The music is like ISIS music- lots of build up, slow powerful vocals, then it gets heavy with lots of orchestra and bass. Notable Members: Julius (fifth in command), Amondu, Genna, Cliff (sixth in command). Despite not being an official member until the end, Kira dons Omni clothes, symbols and gear throughout the entire movie.
- New Republic: On the front, they are full of gallant and easy going soldiers. They are friendly and heroic, close to the communities they serve as they do a lot of hands on volunteer work. They are not elitist but are seen as reliable guardians. However, deep inside, the New Republic is controlled by bigots who hate the Force. This sentiment lies present in nearly all of its citizens, especially its military, who suffered from tragedies committed by Force users 2 decades ago. This bigotry has actually been present for a long time, but rose to prominence only recently.

Episode 8:

[Plot to be finished later, only a small part of it is written now. While the first movie set the ground for the world and introduce characters, this movie focuses a lot on shifting allegiances and political maneuvering of the gangs + New Republic]

Near the start of the movie: Atrekulis reaches out to Novak during his solo journey, extending an offer to welcome him back. After events in which Novak is shunned, Novak angrily asks Atrekulis why he's doing this despite Novak betraying the dark side. Atrekulis says he has had a vision, and has discovered a forgotten prophecy- ones that Luke knew about. Atrekulis does not know the full prophecies yet, but in time, he will discover what they are. He tells Novak that he and Kira are at the center of them. He says that Novak must join him again so he can "fulfill his destiny"; Atrekulis senses this will bring the dark to greater power. Novak rejects Atrekulis, but reluctantly considers his old master's words, as he, too, wishes for the dark side to grow stronger and not be oppressed any longer.

The Blisith second in command is a woman with sharp teeth, third in command is an alien woman.

The New Republic is revealed to be torturing force sensitive prisoners (using them as 'batteries' to power things that negate the Force?)

A cool droid soldier named Colt is introduced as a prominent character. He befriends ZO-30 despite being a rough soldier. ZO-30 is basically identical to BB-8. Their friendship is like how people imagine Snake and Isabella in Smash.

Kira and Novak encounter a small sect that worships the First Force User, who's said to be a very kind and generous being who cut away part of its Force power to share with the other beings who were suffering without it. The First Force Being is called 'Ato'. The name 'Osiro' is uttered by one of the most loyal acolytes who has a seizure and dies a horrific death with black filled eyes and a thousand yard stare; it is a mystery what this word means.

Partway through, Kira realizes her old community is being attacked. She rushes to save it, but fails and sees her guardians killed before her eyes. Despite being mean, Kira still cared for them deep inside. During this same attack, Sam's mother is narrowly saved from the planet (though is rendered unconscious) and transported elsewhere.

During the middle of the movie, Novak and Kira join forces once again. Kira leaves Luke, as Luke still has not changed his mind on the dark side. After a heated argument, she angrily asks if he will suppress her again, just like he did to her as a child. Luke does not answer, and Kira storms off to be with Novak. The pair promise to find a 'grey side', a balance. But this is a hopeless journey that will end in despair.

It is revealed that Luke's only actual daughter was Tarya, a snappy and hot shot New Republic pilot whom Sam bickers with but falls in love with later on. They engage in close competition when flying. It was believed by Meira that Tarya was killed as an infant, but she was actually stolen, then rescued by New Republic people. Berusha (Kira) was Meira's other daughter, born of a single parent birth like Anakin (explained in next movie). When Kira learns that her real father isn't Luke (and was someone unknown) partway during the movie, she's saddened that she's not actually the daughter of Luke, and feels less connected to him and the Jedi. She feels Luke doesn't like her as much now that he found Tarya, who now learns she is actually a Jedi (her force sensitivity was cut off when she was a child, so it is slowly being awoken again). This is one factor that causes Kira to run away.

Meira's first child (Tarya) was stolen and nearly killed by some unknown people for a mysterious reason. Meira thought they had succeeded, but did not know that the child was rescued. After the child is gone, Meira curled up alone in a cave, broken and despondant, and praying to the Force for a second chance. A day later, Meira found another infant lying in her arms when she awakens. She did not know what happened, but when she met again with Luke (who was on another planet in an important mission when Meira suddenly gave birth), she did not tell him that their actual child was kidnapped and "killed".

Tarya is insecure and jealous of Kira, so she puts her down a lot, reminding her of her upbringing in the ghettos. She envies how she was able to be raised near the Force and her real family, while she was cut off. However, deep down, Tarya just wants to be strong enough to be a hero because she cares about saving others, and putting threatening competition down is the only way she can feel like she's the best and have enough confidence to perform well. She is under a lot of pressure to compete with the other ace pilots.

Kira, Sam and Rosalyn part ways on bad terms. Also, some love triangles happen with Sam, Novak, Tarya, Rosalyn and Kira. Han is the only one whom Kira still feels a close bond with before she decides to join Novak.

Near the end of the movie, Sam, Tarya and Rosalyn try to enact a plan, but it fails spectacularly. Sam loses his hand, and Tarya is humiliated and beaten down despite never failing once in the movie before. Rosalyn is put into a coma. Admiral Ackbar sacrifices himself to save an entire army. The only success at the end of the movie is that Leia wins a lightsaber duel which allows the Resistance of Truth to rise; this occurs before Kira and Novak's duel. During the middle of the movie, Luke also wins a duel against several strong people. Kira and Novak defeat the 2nd and 3rd Vizars somewhere between the middle and end of the movie, around the same time as Leia's duel.

Kira and Novak journey together as a pair to find the true meaning of the prophecy that Atrekulis is also seeking. Novak lied to Kira that he'd join the light, and Kira is elated that she fixed him. She believes the two are now working to find 'the balance'. But near the end of the movie, Kira learns that in secret, Novak was working with Atrekulis because Atrekulis promises to save Kira from "some horrible fate" that he only had a vague sense of. Novak reveals that this whole time, he and Atrekulis had been working to recruit Kira, and had been plotting to destroy the very ideals that Kira fiercely wanted to believe in (despite her own mind rejecting them after she feels distant from Luke and her other friends). Kira feels that her strong belief of light side ideals were now foolish, and that she'd been in denial over their efficacy the whole time. She also realizes that Novak lied to her about his promises to come back to Han as a son.

Kira is badly hurt and tells Novak that she never cared for him, and that she will never understand the dark side. Novak is hurt that all his efforts to save Kira- including allying with Atrekulis, whom he hated because he abused and controlled him- were unappreciated. The two now want to kill the other and fight fiercely. After a passionate battle, Kira overwhelms Novak with her unique Sith abilities and is in a prime position to kill him. But at the last moment, she stops. Her anger over Novak's betrayal subsides when she remembers her memories with him. She cries and tells him that she lied about what she said and actually cares for him. Novak, who is badly injured, comes to his senses and tells Kira that he cares for her, too.

Just then, an event occurs that unravels the truth of the prophecy: There were two chosen ones, Kira and Novak. One was destined to destroy the light, while another was destined to destroy the dark. Only one of these will happen. At first, Kira believes that she's the one to destroy the dark, and Novak would destroy the light. But this is not the case. Novak tells Kira that (pieced together using knowledge that only he knows) he is the one to destroy the dark; thus, Kira is the one who will destroy the light. Atrekulis had a vision that someone would be destined to kill Kira, but neither he nor Novak knew this person would be Novak himself. Kira still refuses to strike down one so close to her. She says to "go screw the prophecies"; she and Novak worked so hard to find what the balance is, so they have to let go of traditionalist beliefs from the old Jedi and Sith orders. But Novak's mind is not so sure.

Right after this, through a shared vision, a horrific truth is uncovered about Luke. Kira and Novak learn about an extended prophecy says that one of Meira's child would destroy the light and allow the dark to rise. This was what caused the Jedi acolytes to try to kill Tarya. Later, Luke learned of this prophecy himself from multiple sources, even seeing it in a vision himself. He didn't believe it at first, but he'd seen how his own teachings caused chaos, and over the past few years, he'd grown more and more attached to old Jedi philosophies about 'no attachment'. Somehow, force ghosts could not be reached anymore. Before they were gone, Obi Wan and Yoda warned Luke about Anakin's downfall due to his attachments, and Anakin told Luke to decide on his own if he wants to be with Meira. Once the force ghosts disappear, the Jedi acolytes filled Luke's head with strict and orthodox beliefs. These actually helped the galaxy more, but at controversial costs.

Luke still didn't believe in the prophecy. He tried his best to save Berusha. But when Berusha killed a student in her anger one time, Luke questioned himself. Luke felt that to be the protector of the greater good instead of his own loved ones, he may have to stop her. Deeper in his subconsciousness, Luke also felt shame that he had conceived a child, as at that time he believed that she was his biological daughter, and that he had developed attachments he was told by the Jedi not to develop. Then when Berusha killed an older villager (who was afraid of her and physically hurt her) and chokes out another elderly one (who was the friend of the dead villager yet was kind and innocent to Berusha, and tried to get his friend to stop and apologize), Luke tried to pull her away, but the more he attacked her, the stronger she got. Luke realized that he had no choice but to kill her in order to save this villager. Meira, who did not care as much for strangers, said that it was better to let them die than to kill their own daughter. Meira kept insisting that it was just one incident, and that Meira could change; Luke had tried to help Meira since she was 3 (when he first sense an ominous power in her) but could not, yet Meira never gave up. Fearing that the prophecy was now inevitable, Luke tried to kill Berusha while the child is choking out the villager, but Meira took the blow instead (as she believed this is the only way Luke would stop his rampage; she knew Luke couldn't bear to lose two people he loved, no matter how conflicted he was). Witnessing her father kill her mother, Berusha got out of control and killed many of the students, knocking (an emotionally destroyed) Luke unconscious down the mountain. Just before he went down, he put a technique on her that restricted her connection the force; only Luke could unwind it. But because it took time to take effect, Berusha continued her rampage and finished off all the other students.

Bailen was far away when Meira died and did not know what really happened, but saw Berusha had killed the other students. When Berusha saw him, she fainted. Everyone else on the island was dead. Bailen took this chance to take them both to a faraway planet in the poorer parts of the galaxy that were harder to search in (due to a lack of governmental reach).

After Kira learns the truth, she begins to hate Luke for seeing her as an abomination, and for killing her mother. Then Han rushes in. He sees his son, and tries to save him. Han learns about the prophecy, but doesn't care; he just wants Bailen back. Novak says that he can't go back. He has to do this, as he can't let the light win. He associates the light with all the pain he suffered, and if he goes back to being Bailen, he would have to kill his two loves: the dark side, and Kira. If he wants the dark side- his life's cause- to succeed, he must die to Kira. He also believes that by being consumed by the dark side, Kira will finally find what her soul has long desired.

Shedding tears, Novak begs Kira again to kill him. Kira, also in tears, refuses.

Novak forces himself to think horrible thoughts. He forces himself to remember how Han used to berate him for being a "useless child" and neglected him when he accidentally put Han's crew in grave danger. These memories are attacked by memories of how Han cared for him, but Novak forces them out. He realizes why he was taken away from the light. He's been preparing to embrace the dark ever since the light pained him as a child, and for this very day. He thought his parents were dead, but Atrekulis always told him that they were not, and that this day must come for him to fulfill his destiny. Novak thought Atrekulis was just tricking him. Now, he realizes he was not.

Han stands in front of a badly injured Novak, who is in great distress. Just then, Luke runs in, but a force-blocking barrier prevents him from getting physically close to Kira, Han and Novak, though he can still be seen and heard by them. Since Luke is unable to use the Force to interact with the others, he pleads with Novak that he mustn't do something that he'll regret, as he senses that Novak is having dark thoughts and is about to do something horrible. Suddenly ignited with hatred by the sight of his old master who tortured him, Novak (who'd already made up his mind before Luke's arrival) hesitates no longer, and kills his father upon igniting his lightsaber.

Kira screams in agony. All this time, Novak talked about hating his father. Kira still thought there was good in Novak when he “took back” all he said with a promise. But now, it seemed she was wrong. Unleashing her rage, Kira ignites her lightsaber again, but Luke yells at her to stop. Novak is slumping over on a rail, and goads Kira into giving in, so that she can let the dark side reign free and save herself. Luke says that he realized his mistake- the prophecy doesn’t have to come true, and that they just can’t give up. Kira asks how Luke will stop the prophecy, but Luke doesn’t have an answer, so Kira senses he’s lying (he actually is, as he truly has not changed how he feels). Luke still continues to tell Kira that she can’t do this; she can’t give in to anger.

But Kira hatefully asks him what he means. Why can’t Novak die? Because he has to fulfill his prophecy- which would mean killing her? She tells him not to hide anything from her anymore, because now she knows everything. That he killed her mother, his wife. She says she can never look at him the same way again. Once again, Luke hesitates to answer. But he’s learned not to do that anymore. He can’t run away from telling her what he truly feels. Finally, Luke quietly says, “We have to sacrifice ourselves for the greater good”, a line he has repeatedly told Kira many times, though in different contexts. Ashamed at herself for being an abomination, and realizing no one alive truly cares for her life, Kira stabs Novak in the heart, pushing him down into the lava below.

Luke screams out in despair, and Kira moves to a ship nearby. Luke can’t get over the barrier preventing him from getting to her. He helplessly watches as his adopted daughter take off on the ship, leaving him alone yet again. Within the droid-piloted Blisith ship, Kira freely allows Atrekulis into her mind, and telepathically, the dark lord welcomes her to the dark side. Now that all the Blisith higher ups are dead (Novak was poised to be second in command, as 3rd and 2nd were killed by Novak and Kira), Kira becomes the savior of Blisith, and Atrekulis’s most powerful apprentice.

Kira flies to a planet of desperate force-sensitive prisoners (which include regular civilians, along with both Blisith and Omni), who are being tortured by the faction of Omni who have made evil deals with the New Republic. She frees the prisoners by slaughtering Omni and New Republic guards. The Omni prisoners are given a choice to convert to Blisith, and they all take up the offer. Kira had already developed a following by Blisith who admired her affinity in the dark side, and now she was finally their dark side queen. Kira declares to her followers that they will now destroy those who oppress the force-sensitive- especially the non-force sensitive- so that they can take their rightful place as rulers of the galaxy.

Just as Luke is leaving, he sees Novak’s body lying on the ground, charred up. Novak is surviving only by the strength of the Force alone; something in him makes him not want to die, as if he feels he needs to do something (like redeem himself for killing Han, though he will not admit this). Luke rescues his nephew, despite Novak still hating him. The former Vizar is now in a worse state than Anakin was after his battle with Obi Wan.

All hope seems to be lost. The New Republic, Omni, and Blisith are all run by evil overlords (though Kamalah, Omni’s leader, is shown to be good), and there does not seem to be anyone who can fight against all three of them. But the Resistance of Truth is now established. Led by a lightsaber wielding Leia, it is the only force that can spread the truth about what the New Republic did to cause the Omni and Blisith to arise. Multiple factions are now at war to claim control over the use of the force in the galaxy. Sam and the others must face their old friend and try to win her back to the light.

Character Descriptions:

- Meira: red hair, pale skin. Maybe cast her with a half Asian actress (who has dyed hair/wig), and Meira's mother is played by an Asian actress?
- Tarya: also red hair, but tanner since she's outside near suns so much. Tall and athletic, taking after her mother (unlike Kira). Basically Asuka from Evangelion.
- Colt: think of Solid Snake, but as a robot. Has the lowest form of force sensitivity due to being a droid.
- Novak: Tall, dark hair, muscular, long nose. Has a big scar, marked on him before Ep7. Not much different than Kylo except he's far more emo/brooding instead of being impulsive and childish. Both are insecure and unstable but in different way. Very much like Zuko. Maybe cast with Germanic actor?
- Kira: brown hair, pale blue eyes. Athletic, short and small. Socially awkward and impulsive like Rey.
- Sam: has curly short hair, dark skin, lean and athletic. Looks like young Lando from Solo, but dresses very differently. Starts off clean shaven then grows some facial hair in Ep9. Very much like Han Solo, in fact they're almost identical. Only in it for the money and doesn't care about the Force (like Han). Ace pilot and shot, but only barely passing as force sensitive enough to join Blisith. Still proves to be a capable leader and becomes the central hero of the New Republic. Wields a xeno dagger. Maybe cast African actor?
- Rosalyn: frumpy, black hair. Your typical 'overexcited best friend' sidekick. Doesn't know how to fight but is somehow a very lucky shot. Squeamish but hates it when people attack her friends, so she'll always stand up for them. When she stands up to someone who's mean to her or her friends, she's very brave and doesn't budge, and isn't afraid to throw a few punches even though she's not trained to fight. Has only a speck of connection to the Force. Maybe make her an alien?
- Several Omni Crowns are aliens. Julius is half-alien, but looks a lot like a human (Eg how elves look). Cliff is a human.
- Cliff: a gallant, tall and well built young man around the same age as Novak. Blonde hair, green eyes.
- Artrekulis and Kamalah (the Omni head) are both the same species of alien. Why they're the same species is not explained in Ep8
- Returning: Luke, Han, Leia, C3P0, Chewbacca, R2D2, Admiral Ackbar, Mon Mothma, Wedge in Ep8. Palpatine, Obi Wan, Yoda, Anakin, Qui Gon, Ahsoka, Ezra, and other force users (along with a surprise by Lando) return in Ep9 as Force ghosts who are temporarily resurrected to fight, though they only have brief interactions with other characters and aren't that much of a focus (aside from Anakin).

Main cast of heroes seems to be lacking aliens, so add some in

Episode 9:

Novak is resurrected as a cyborg, and escapes the facilities. He is haunted by the ghost of Anakin, who is gradually returning. It starts off as a horrifying ghost of Vader that makes Novak start to lose his mind.

He struggles with trying to return to the dark, but the light in him prevents him from doing so. Eventually, after a Zuko-like journey, Luke and Leia are able to reach him and convince him to find 'the balance'. They forgive him for killing Han, though Novak does not forgive himself and seeks redemption. Kira doesn't know he's alive until the middle of the movie, so before then, she feels that the light will inevitably die, and deep inside, is afraid of the consequences.

[To be filled in: the rest of the plot. Force ghosts return; Obi Wan, Anakin, Yoda, and Qui Gon play prominent roles. Sam and Tarya and Rosalyn love triangle continues, Sam ends up with Rosalyn while Tarya overcomes her ego problem after being beaten down near the end of Ep8, and is just happy for everyone. Bryan has a terrible inner conflict over whether he can truly kill Sam, and he saves Sam by letting him go early in the movie. Later on, however, Bryan is dead set on killing Sam and Sam's other friends. Sam is forced to kill Bryan in order to save his other friends. Luke discovers a new philosophy that allows him to come to terms with what he did, helps turn Novak back to the light, and sacrifices himself to save the galaxy. Leia survives to lead the New Republic.]

As in Ep8, Omni and Blisith split into factions, and these have shifting allegiances. Omni's leader, Kamalah (introduced in Ep8), is a kind and powerful elderly woman. But Kamalah and Atrekulis are later revealed to be two halves of the same person: Osiro (this truth is revealed in Ep9). Osiro is able to split its body into two physical halves and have them operate seemingly independent of one another, but this is simply a trick of the most powerful Force user of all time.

Osiro (Oh-see-rho) is revealed to be the core piece of Darth Plagueis, after his soul was split up into three. Darth Plagueis was the reincarnation of Ato, the first Force user (who is neither male nor female) and a good being who gave away the Force to other beings that were suffering (this is the 'first civilization' so there is only 1 race of living beings at this time, and they live in an ethereal realm. The Force is implied to give material form to beings in a slow evolution and move them away from the ethereal realm). Ato had tried to give equal amounts of the Force to all, but it was found that due to the shape of souls, not everyone could have the same amount. Some were stronger than others. Everyone had a tiny share, but a few with the lowest amount turned jealous and killed those with more, and caused conflict. Nearly all the strong force sensitives were wiped out, due to being outnumbered. The weakly force-sensitives betrayed Ato's trust of the good present in all. This polluted Ato with dark thoughts, and it became corrupted, regretted its generosity, and sought immortality so it could rule the galaxy forever. Ato was reincarnated throughout the eons in different forms. However, Ato's soul was split into 3. Two of the pieces were sealed away by Ato's disciples to prevent their corrupted master from ever returning. The last piece escaped their grasp, and was reincarnated many times as different forms.

But each of these forms was imperfect and weak. When it reincarnated into Darth Plagueis and regained its memories, Plagueis continued to seek a way to get his true form back, and unlike his previous reincarnations, nearly succeeded. He had found a way to create life by unsealing the other 2 pieces of Ato's soul, using one piece to create Juafina. He was unable to find Juafina in time as his creation was made somewhere unknown to him; Palpatine secretly took Juafina's soul and hid it from his master. To make sure he would not make the same mistakes, Plagueis sought to be more careful when creating Anakin. But just as his procedure was set in motion, Palpatine killed his master. Hence, Plagueis's soul was reincarnated as the putrid creature known as Osiro, but it was so weak that it was forced into hiding until it could grow stronger again. It had also lost its memories and had to relearn everything, which Palpatine prevented Osiro from doing. Plagueis's fear that the Force would turn against him had come true- his own apprentice was lured by it to kill him. Soon after his death, the procedure to create Anakin had finished (when Anakin dies, this piece wandered until it became Novak), and due to Palpatine's death and Plagueis's ritual which would make the soul piece continue to reincarnate just like his own soul piece, the last became Kira.

Essentially, these pieces were the Father (the balance), the Daughter (the light) and the Son (the dark), as mirrored by Mortis. Each child lacked its other half, so the Daughter was balanced by making Kira become the dark, and vice versa. But this was an unnatural balance, so the Force sought to correct it by destroying the 'corrections'. Anakin was to bring balance to the Force by getting rid of Palpatine, who had killed the previous reincarnation of the Daughter (Meira's mother) and absorbed her soul into himself to become the strongest force wielder in the galaxy. When Anakin died, this brought balance by getting rid of the Son, the other correction. But true balance was not achieved for very long because the 3 pieces were not reunited, so instability continued. Once Osiro had regained its power (think of going from Cell's first form to Semi-Perfect Cell; in the finale, Osrio achieves Perfect Cell when it starts to absorb Kira and Novak's souls before being interrupted by them partway), it sought to kill the 'corrections' and absorb them into himself to reconstruct the soul of the First Force Being. It believes that to bring true balance to the Force, the Force has to be siphoned out of everyone else so that it is the only being that can command the Force, distributing it to loyal followers (namely the force sensitives who are both loyal and have naturally 'superior' soul shapes). The reasoning was that in the wrong hands, it causes wars and other bad things. This would make people become subjected and lack free will, and they would essentially be automatons who exist simply to put on an entertaining puppet show for Osiro.

[This exact same reason for 'force siphoning' to prevent the misuse of the Force appears in my other renditions of Ep7-9. But unlike those other renditions, this final boss is NOT misguided and sees itself as a savior, but is truly evil. It does not wish to do this to usher in eternal peace. It does it out of spite and hatred, and believes most beings deserve to be oppressed. It only sees itself as the only ruler, one capable of free will. Those force sensitives who serve under it will enjoy life as an extension of Osiro- enjoying the power that comes from manifesting its rule. Like many in Omni and Blisith, Osiro is a force-sensitive being supremecist and believes those weakly connected to the Force deserve to either die or become slaves to those whose 'soul shape' inherently makes them more strongly connected to the Force. Osiro believes most of the weak will always become jealous and insecure, and thus they cannot be trusted. Consequently, droids would all be killed or become slaves- no exceptions- because they are unable to be strongly connected to the Force. Osiro knows that what it's doing is wrong and will cause suffering, and it relishes in seeing the pain of non force-sensitives, who are the majority of the galaxy. In its first appearance, Osiro kills ZO-30 in front of Rosalyn, calling the droid pathetic and an abomination. Kira does not see this, but later learns of it when she's confronted by Rosalyn after she kills Tarya. Osiro also easily wipes out an entire star cruiser with children on board, and kills Wedge, who leaves a family behind. It also kills Mon Mothma and then nearly kills Lando.]

Osiro is revealed to have orchestrated all the events leading up to Ep9, and when the gangs emerge from the wild aggressions of disturbed youth, it slips into them and secretly takes over as the head of both Omni and Blisith. It does not DIRECTLY puppet the New Republic. The New Republic leaders are not allied with Omni and Blisith and hate them, and Osiro has no control over its government. However, what Osiro does do is use their own fear and hatred of the Force against them. By pushing them to torture force sensitives, Osiro is able to show force sensitives just how vile the New Republic is, and this propaganda radicalizes force sensitives into extremists. The force related tragedies are also NOT caused by Osiro, nor are the New Republic's blockades on the Force and the creation of the rebel gangs. Those were all caused by people's inherent sins, and once war and conflict were established, Osiro seized the opportunity to manipulate people against themselves. The more force sensitives pledged loyalty to it, the stronger Osiro grew in power; this is a passive ability that the soul of the Father has.

Osiro's main goal is to become strong enough to use the rituals to absorb Kira and Novak's souls. Thus, it wants to rally force sensitives to its cause by radicalizes it. But Kira and Novak must grow strong too before they die; Osiro is fattening up the pigs for the slaughter. Osiro had thought Novak had reached his full potential when Kira stabbed him, but it sensed Kira did not, so Osiro sought to fatten her Force powers up. When Novak was resuscitated as a cyborg, he was able to grow stronger in a tangential way through cybernetics and by tapping into the light.

Osiro's power was still in recovery in the events before Ep9. During Ep9, stuff happens that triggers Osrio's achievement of its full power.

Osiro could not do this before because Palpatine made sure to keep Plagueis's core piece weak, but once Palpatine was gone, it would rise again. The Emperor wanted to obtain all 3 pieces within himself so he could be immortal and siphon all the Force into himself, becoming unstoppable. Palpatine had already absorbed the Daughter's soul, but he could not absorb the souls of the Son and Father. So he waited, keeping Anakin alive indefinitely as a cyborg (meaning his life would last for centuries) and keeping Osiro as a prisoner, until he could find a technique to absorb their souls. It was later discovered that Palpatine had too much evil in him; he could absorb the Daughter and use his darkness to keep the soul piece from making him good, but having the Son and Daughter within him would be like having a positively and negatively charged magnet within- it would destroy him. Only one who was truly balanced could absorb both; this was Osiro. Palpatine could not absorb Osiro because he could never find balance within the Force, but he believed he could circumvent this barrier (what he did not know was this was impossible to circumvent).

Luke's final lightsaber duel is with a resurrected Palpatine, who was revived using a dark and forbidden ritual by the good guys as he was the only one who knew how to defeat Osiro [like with Hannibal in Silence of the Lambs]. Palpatine found a way to survive as the dark side equivalent to a force ghost, but lived as basically a soulless ghost in a tortured realm, as if he was just a heart that was beating with no mind. But his essence was still preserved, allowing him to be resurrected as a 'prisoner' to a summoner. The good guys had no choice but to use Palpatine to exploit Osiro's weakness; this is key to allowing Kira and Novak to actually damage Osiro. But once Palpatine finishes his goal, his 'handlers' lose control of him and Palpatine kills his wardens, allowing him to reign free. He steals the summoner's power and becomes stronger than ever before in his new form. Palpatine seeks to overthrow Osiro using a hidden plan he's conjured; he had been manipulating the good guys the whole time, using their own desires against them. Unlike how Osiro wants force sensitives to reign supreme, Palpatine only wants himself- and no one else- to be able to use the Force. In a way, though he is weaker than Osiro, his intentions are more evil and horrific because not even loyal force sensitives would thrive in his regime. After ZO-30's death, Colt is saddened. To make peace with things, Colt sacrifices himself to save Luke so that Luke can take down Palpatine. After Palpatine kills Colt, he force pushes away the droid's body like it's junk.

Luke duels Palpatine and narrowly defeats him. But Palpatine takes on a final form that fuses to a Death Star-like superweapon, and aims to destroy the entire New Republic with trillions of beings. This would also allow him to gain enough power to, he believes, take on Osiro. Luke sacrifices himself in his X-Wing to destroy the dark lord. After this, Luke becomes a Force ghost, as seen in the end of the movie. Luke is able to speak to Kira before he dies, and they find peace. When Luke dies, it is felt by Tarya, Novak, Leia and Kira.

Anakin's force ghost still exists despite Novak being alive because the force ghost is not tied to the soul of the First Force user, but rather to the consciousness and memories of Anakin.

Meira is Palpatine's daughter. After finding out who was the reincarnation of the Daughter, Palpatine knew he could not convince Meira's mother, Juafina, to willingly give up her soul, as Juafina was too attuned to the light. So Palpatine, in his youth, manipulated Juafina so that she would fall in love with him and birth a child. Once she completely trusted Palpatine as the father to her teenage child, Palpatine cast a ritual on Meira that made her fall ill and in a coma, incurable by any method of modern medicine. Since Meira and Palpatine were tied by blood, this ritual would allow Palpatine to access soul energy being transferred to his daughter. He then lied to Juafina about what happened to Meira, and said that the only way to save the child would be to give up her soul- only her soul could work and no one else (this was true due to her soul being the Daughter, though Palpatine doesn't divulge this detail to her). Juafina, not knowing just how important her soul was, complied, and during the transfer, Palpatine stole the soul of the Daughter. He believed his daughter to have died, but she was actually in a coma, never aging as if she was in a cryogenic vessel. Meira was hidden by a droid bounty hunter working for Palpatine who felt sorry for her once he learned what happened to his lover Juafina (who rejected him for Sheev). Meira awoke when Palpatine was killed, as his ritual over her was now relinquished, and she could live and age as a normal human now. She had lost her memories, but always felt a draw to the dark side. She journeyed to far away places, hoping to learn who she was. After she learned she was the daughter of Palpatine from the droid who rescued her, she trained as an assassin with him and other Sith sympathizers, believing that it was the only thing she was born to do. She sought to revive the Sith by killing the greatest obstacle to their resurgence: Luke Skywalker. However, the two instead fell in love, and Meira turned on the assassins.

After Osiro reveals its true form (this is where things get shin megami tensei-ish), Kira is still loyal to the cause, as she has nowhere else to go. Though nervous about following this new leader that essentially lied to her, she still serves Osiro as its apprentice.

Tarya is trained to become an actual Jedi, and gets Anakin's lightsaber. She meets with Novak and they do not get along at first, but Tarya is determined to work with him because he's destined to save the light (though later on in Ep9 a third prophecy is revealed which says that there is a third path, and Tarya is the key to ushering it in). Tarya undergoes a harsh ritual to unlock her hidden potential that was blocked by the New Republic. She is pivotal to a victory in a decisive battle, and the New Republic- who once hated force sensitives- begins to change its mind as one of its most beloved heroes is revealed to be not just force sensitive, but just as heroic as she was before. However, even all this training isn't enough for her to take on her half-sister, so she relies on enhancements, gadgets, and cunning traps. Tarya is still arrogant and hotheaded at the start of the movie (though she's lost a bit of her confidence due to the end of Ep8), but the more she loses and is taught how to be a Jedi, the more she overcomes her ego and jealousy (especially when she senses that Sam likes Rosalyn more than her now; she has to learn to come to peace with this). Near the end of the movie, she has overcome her flaws and battles with Kira, but is gravely wounded, apologizing to her half-sister as she's dying and insisting that it was her fault for why Kira felt abandoned. The music that plays during Vader's death is heard as Kira kneels over Tarya, who's lying curled up on the ground. This causes a turning point in Kira.

Later on, Novak discovers his cousin has died, so filled with vengeance, he goes to battle Kira, who is now emotionally broken and loses the duel. Novak is pressured to fulfill the prophecy by killing Kira, but a lot of stuff happens (involving Novak realizing that he would return to the dark side by killing Kira out of hatred and revenge?) to change both Kira and Novak's minds. This includes Kira realizing that Sam, Luke, Rosalyn and the others all love her; she had interacted with them before but rejected them. After Tarya's death, Kira meets with Rosalyn once more; Rosalyn makes one final plea to Kira, but she still rejects it because 'it's too late to go back after killing Tarya'. She thinks she's just like Osiro now. Then Kira duels Novak, loses, and something triggers Kira to let go of her hatred and seek redemption. Novak tells Kira that he felt he could not go back after killing Han, but Luke and Leia saved him by giving him another chance. So Novak follows in their teachings and forgives Kira for killing his cousin. This makes Kira feel like she has a way back to the light, so she joins Novak on a path to redemption.

The two Chosen ones join forces to take down a far more powerful Osiro. Only by working together do they unlock a side of Ato that's been in a slumber since Ato's death. After they defeat Osiro, they cleanse its soul using some object. This soul regains the compassion of Ato, takes the form of an ethereal child (like in Akira, but an alien), and it sacrifices its life energy to revive Tarya (since the cleansed soul deems Tarya, who is a product of Anakin and Juvaфина, as the best candidate to house the cleansed soul piece). This brings balance to the Force because the three pieces are now united in their bonds of friendship in 3 people, instead of having the 3 pieces all being in 1 person. Ato is now not one being, but a triangle of relations. When the 3 die, these pieces would reincarnate in others, and only by having the new resurrections understand and be bonded with one another would peace continue to reign in the galaxy.

Tarya, badly injured and on cyber crutches after escaping the crumbling throne room, sees that Sam really has gotten with Rosalyn. But she is happy for them and doesn't need praise. She sees that the people are cheering for Sam as his heroics were more visible (he was basically leading an entire army like Aragorn in LOTR), and she also just smiles (she has an eyepatch on). She watches the suns set while being alone, and is fine with everything.

So in the end, Novak and Kira join up again to defeat the big bads, defy the prophecies by both surviving, and bring peace to the galaxy once again.

Overall lightsaber duels (not counting just using the lightsaber to fight; requires the scene to focus on the duelists and not treating them as just part of the background):

Ep 7:

- Lots of small background fights between Vizars and Crowns- equal win ratio
- Novak and Kira vs Cliff

Ep 8:

- An Omni Crown vs an evil Omni Crown- brief fight, good person is killed
- A good Blisith vs another evil Omni crown- brief fight, good person is killed
- Luke vs 3 strong Omni Crowns revealed to be his former students who have now turned evil against force-sensitives they believe them to be a danger to society (after their friends were killed by Luke's mishandlings and Kira)- he takes out 2 but the strongest one (the 2nd Crown) hits him with a surprise attack (when Luke is preoccupied with defeating another Crown) and knocks him out of the battlefield. The 2nd Crown thinks Luke is dead; Luke actually survives
