

First movie: The Tale of Two Academies

Takes a lot of the plot from the sequel rewrites I've already brainstormed. Literally copies the plot of Harry Potter and Frozen but dresses them up in Star Wars, to see what magical academies in SPACE would be like.

The opening scene shows a heroic Jedi saving a village from an attack by several masked Sith. A younger Sith slaughters many Jedi and strikes fear into their hearts as they anticipate and run away from her. In the village, a young 14 year old blonde girl named Elise watches him in awe. Elise's life is boring, as she is an orphan farmgirl in the middle of nowhere who never encounters the Force, space, or anything magical. She has never left the atmosphere of her planet, much less her village. Her caretakers are not abusive, but rarely keep an eye on her, only seeing her as a worker, not family. They are nonchalant and barely pay attention to her.

Then, Elise receives a hologram invitation to Jedi Academy, which re-establishes a millenia old school that existed in secret, unknown to the Jedi and Sith, and stopped during the Republic in fear that they would be found by the Jedi or by Palpatine. It has been hundreds of years since the Empire fell. Everyone knows of the Force, but few ever encounter it.

Meanwhile, an older Sith named Mila, around 17 years of age, chastises her 14 year old new recruit for her mistakes during the attack. The Sith unmasks herself to show a short and pale, redheaded girl with freckles and bad teeth named Aetha. Aetha apologizes and promises that next time, she will not fail. Aetha is said to be fearsome due to the prophecy that she is the one who will bring down the Light forever. She is Sith princess royalty, and has been homeschooled her entire life by her two parents. Now, she will enter Sith academy. She vows to kill the heroic Jedi.

Like Hogwarts, both academies hold dark, ancient secrets and corridors.

Elise travels into a hidden worm hole, and arrives into the World of the Whills, an astral world between the physical and Netherworld where general relativity and quantum mechanics behave differently and magically. Here, force sensitives have established grand civilizations. Those descended from legendary force sensitives have come out of hiding after the Empire fell, as Vader sought to kill each and every last one of them. They belonged to ancient sects that separated themselves from the Jedi involved in politics. They kept their existence a secret; the Jedi and Sith thought they had long been extinct.

On the strange quantum tunneling ship to Jedi Academy, Elise meets the handsome, wisecracking Jedi who saved her village, and also an alien boy. The Jedi's named is Han Skywalker, named after Han Solo, and is one year older. He is the son of a powerful Jedi teacher at the school, and a kingdom prince, descended from Princess Leia Organa. Jedi Academy is a four year school. The alien boy, named Krstov, is a new student like her. Krstov is a survivalist who is not receptive of others, but is always eager to help others. Though he prefers to be alone, he strives to be a natural boy scout. Han teases him and gets him to open up; Krstov is a childhood friend of Han's family, so they know each other pretty well. Though he isn't awkward and has a biting sense of humor, Krstov has trouble relating to people. On the other hand, Han is extremely friendly, albeit a prankster. Elise befriends them both very quickly, as she shares their sense of humor and noble outlook on life. Unlike Elise, Krstov is not particularly smitten about the Jedi; he just sees the academy as a means to an end to help his home tribe, while Elise hates her home.

At the same time, Aetha ventures into a terrifying black hole. She is afraid, but determined to bring honor to her family, so she goes in. Though apprehensive at first, after seeing other students having fun surfing through, she lets go and smiles. She enters the World of the Whills, but on the dark side. She takes a vessel to the academy.

On a Star Destroyer-like ship, Aetha meets students training to be Sith bounty hunters and assassins. Aetha is talkative but awkward, trying to show how tough she is to fit in, but her eyes dart nervously as she spits out her words and whispers them. Aetha is bullied by the others due to being shy and keeping to herself, but intimidates them due to knowledge of her merciless family name. She gives off big 'school shooter' vibes, as she swears for revenge. The Sith academy encourages competition over cooperation. Aetha befriends only one student, a droid cyborg force sensitive who sort of looks like C3PO, who is sadistic and likes torturing people; Aetha is sort of disgusted by her, but puts up with her because they are both outcasts, and her friend thinks Aetha and her are best pals, thinking that Aetha is sadistic, too, due to rumors about her ferociousness. This student's name is LOR-E5, or Laurie-5.

When Elise gets to the school, she learns of a prophecy that one from the Light will meet to defeat one from the Dark, with either the Light Chosen One or the Dark Chosen One killing the other. There are several candidates, including Han. But most surprisingly is that the prophecy seems to point to Elise the most.

During the opening ceremony, the Jedi headmaster honors the school's first headmaster since its re-emergence: Luke Skywalker. There are three houses: Bantha, Varactyl, Tauntaun. Elise is sorted into Tauntaun, like Han. It is the most respectable house, unlike Bantha, and everyone cheers for her, including Han, her crush.

- Tauntaun: the Gryffindors. Brave, self-sacrificing, able to withstand any challenge
- Varactyl: loyal and organized and righteous. Intelligent, they make excellent bureaucrats and generals.
- Bantha: the Hufflepuffs. Just everyone else who is a hard worker, and has to work hard to drive or change themselves, as they are not naturally brave or particularly intelligent. Even if you are naturally strong with the Force, if you lack the belief of Tauntaun or the unwavering idealism of Varactyl, you will be sorted into Bantha.

On the Sith side, the three houses are: Sarlacc, Krayt, Wampa. As with most of her family, Aetha hopes to be in Krayt. But she is sorted into Sarlacc, the most mocked house, much to the muffled laughter of others. The headmaster of the Sith school is a tall, mechanical black mantis-like creature that speaks like Hamill's Joker. It has many gears and moves like an erratic Looney Tunes cartoon.

- Krayt: Sly and gifted, their masterful plans are driven by a lust for the dark side. Cunning, tricky and talented.
- Wampa: Blindly angered, completely self absorbed. They do not care anything but the singular goal of acting on their primal emotions. Rather than focus on being stealthy and cunning, they listen primarily to their needs and desires. The most ferocious; they are hard to get along with.
- Sarlacc: directionless, naturally inclined to be selfish but not particularly exceptional to win against others. The purpose of this house is to drive its members angry; the pain and ridicule they endure is meant to make them stronger, and they seek revenge against all those who have wronged them, swallowing them whole in a bottomless pit as they are slowly tortured. Through natural selection, only the strongest in Sarlacc will rise to the top, while the rest in the house fall to be consumed into nothingness.

To get school supplies, Elise and her new friends visit Coruscant and traverse its wondrous cities. They encounter the dangerous Sith rival school. Both schools are unregulated outside of the law. Aetha gives Elise a terrifying side eye, but the two cannot fight, as Coruscant is a neutral ground and is heavily guarded by military.

Both build their own lightsaber. Aetha's is a light orange, unusual for a Sith. Elise's is an icy blue.

Elise begins her classes. There is Force sensitivity, Piloting, Dueling, Tinkering, Artifact Crafting, Species, Astronomical Navigation, Jedi Mind Tricks, Meditation/Alchka, Mind Soothing (creature control, making people's moods calmer), Detoxification, Force healing, Force Concealment, Tapas/Mochiro, Prophecy, Tactics, and more.

Aetha's classes include Force choking, force lightening, transfer essence, mind control, illusions, rage, deception, etc. There are gladiator arenas where students are allowed to viciously fight, but only kill each other under special circumstances, such as 'justified revenge'.

Elise discovers she has a strange ability to heal people of ailments, namely dangerous parasites, that other Jedi cannot, and even medicine has trouble dealing with- medical procedures have only 1% survival rate. Blue, ice-like powers converge towards the place she touches on, and the parasite is gone. Some believe this is an indication that she is the Chosen One.

The Jedi school drills discipline into its students, telling them they must give up selfish attachments for the greater good. This does not sit well with Elise, as she does not like concealing her powers, which are powerful but so hard to control that they cause some accidents in the school.

A chance event occurs in which Elise meets Aetha, but doesn't kill her, and heals her instead. In fact, Elise stands up against the Sith bullies and drives them away. Aetha is surprised at her mercy, and learns about the light side, drawn into its principles. Aetha reveals her alien form to Elise, and tells her that her family is ashamed of it; no one in the public knows they are part alien. Aetha greatly admires Elise's healing powers and wishes she could heal, but she never could, and her family told her it was impossible given their lineage. Aetha tells Elise she was brainwashed to be a child soldier since birth, and deeply regrets all the people she killed; she felt she had no choice because people are meant to kill one another, and if you don't kill them, they'll kill others anyways, even you. As a child, she thought nothing of it and even enjoyed it, as her parents always complimented her for doing so, but she began to see the errors in her ways as she grew up. However, she never had the courage or the means to defy her forced upbringing and find a way to escape. Elise tells Aetha that she can disguise herself and join them; Aetha wishes for this prospect, but is still too afraid to do it. She goes back to her school.

Some teachers at the academy behave rudely towards Elise. The girl feels she is being watched, and tells the friendly headmaster that she thinks some teachers may be infiltrators from the Sith school. But things take a turn for the worse when the truth eventually comes out that Elise was actually discovered to be not the Chosen of the Light, but the Chosen of the Dark. Han was interpreted by the teachers to be the Light Side's Chosen One, and must kill Elise, else she will be the downfall of the school. Elise's 'healing' ability is found not to be healing at all, but killing. She was killing the parasites. This is discovered when Elise tries to heal someone of a wound, but ends up only injuring them instead, draining their life force into herself.

Elise discovers that she was only invited to the school because of suspicions that she might be the Chosen of the Dark, and they wanted to keep an eye on her. This is why they stalked her in the shadows. Now, after an event that signals the confirmation of the prophecies, combined with the accidental destruction Elise has caused, many of the teachers seek to kill her. During a final confrontation, one of the teachers, Han's father, goes to Elise, and attacks her. Elise kills him in self-defense by unleashing a long forgotten Sith power that only the strongest can wield- confirming to her that she is, indeed, the Sith Chosen. Fearful of the school, Elise runs towards the Sith Academy for protection. Mila embraces the scared girl in her arms, and shuns Aetha, who Mila found was helping the Light. Aetha runs away to escape Mila's frightening chase, and is saved by teachers who came after Elise. Mila runs away with Aetha.

Aetha conceals her identity, turning herself into her red-black alien form that is not a Zabrak but resembles one (as her blood is a mixture of Zabrak and human), and joins the Jedi Academy as a transfer. She forges a fake past, with falsified records from a distant Jedi school in the middle of nowhere. Her family's secret is that they were descended from Maul and Nightsisters, and thus were part alien, and concealed themselves as humans in public. No one knows the royal family is aliens, due to inner turmoil between the Sith and the Nightsisters who were thought to be wiped out. Thus, even if her family detects her, they cannot tell others that she is with the Jedi academy. Aetha also has a crush on Han, who doesn't know her true self.

Not all the teachers are against Elise. Some support her, saying that the prophecy may be defied. The headmaster, whose academic lineage means Luke is his grand-master ancestor, also supports her.

Now both Aetha and Elise are on the run from their old schools.

End of First movie.

OTHER NOTES:

The Academies: There are several large grounds and hidden passageways. Mysterious and ancient.

The World of the Whills is like a wizarding world separate from the galaxy. There are many rules and practices that differ from the outside world. This gives a sense of a foreign land. The rest of the galaxy also has its wonders; Elise was stuck on one planet before so she never got the chance to explore the whole galaxy.

The Queen, Han's mother, wears a huge thick gown with flowing tailcoats. She is in a white Crystal palace with lots of geometric designs, arches and pillars. In a royal hall, she fights a circle of Sith all at once with her saber, using the Force to control her gown and attack Sith like tentacles or Dr Strange's cape. Overhead camera shot shows this elegant dance.

To capture the Twilight audience and make even more money, there's a troubled, angry Sith that Elise is drawn towards. He is tortured by his family pains but protects Elise from the Jedi. He is Mila's younger brother. Elise has to try to change him. Han wants to kill him, but not Elise, though she stands in his way and the Jedi tell Han he must fulfill the prophecy. Elise feels betrayed by Han because he didn't tell her he knew she was the Sith Chosen. The Jedi manipulate her by lying that they accept her to the academy, when they were actually trying to use her to determine if she was the Sith Chosen or not. He is irrationally drawn to Elise and attacks the Jedi to save her. Elise has a way with connecting to Sith whom the Jedi and Sith both outcast. Mila's brother's name is Grant. Mila is confident and gives Elise comfort by accepting her into Sith ranks, as Elise has trouble adjusting at first but quickly fits in. Aetha is an outcast in both schools. Mila and Grant are aliens but still very humanoid, making them exotic and wild, a staple of romance novels. Grant is in danger of losing his mind completely to the dark side, desiring nothing but to drain others of their will and their Force, and Elise wishes to save him. She feels an internal struggle in which Grant wishes for a normal life as a teenager.

If this is a sequel trilogy let Han have a different name like Colt, his middle name is just Han. The one who Elise kills is not his father, but his closest teacher and master. Colt's father or grandfather is Han, who is now a King. Luke is the headmaster. Maybe make it so it's later revealed that Han is adopted and not related to Skywalkers, and Elise and Aetha are cousins. But this story has been done to death. This is all about the search for more money, though. Still I'd prefer if Colt Han was Skywalker by blood and Aetha was Maul's granddaughter. Then Elise is either a nobody or Satine's and Obi Wan's granddaughter, making her royalty in line for the throne, too. Eventually Aetha gets a dual lightsaber like Maul. Palpatine has no family. Say Elise is considered a shameful evil to the Jedi bc she was born of a forbidden conception under a lie that Obi Wan and Satine tried to hide; Obi and Satine were resurrected in the Whills and that's when they conceived. This resurrection channeled the dark side, so Obi Wan gave in slightly. Now he feels he must right his wrong but is conflicted to kill his daughter or not. He remembered how he spared Anakin and caused untold suffering, but also remembered how his personal attachment to Anakin allowed Skywalker to fulfill the prophecy of balance. Luke discovered this ancient world as it was in need of his help after being cut off from the Force for so long; it was impoverished. Luke and Leia use the resources of the galaxy to help rebuild the world, and keep it hidden as the Whills is distrustful of the outside (the outside world had tried to destroy them before and steal their resources). Leia remains in the outside world in politics, while Luke disappears; people believe he is off to a faraway land, helping those in need there, and they are not wrong.

To capture the Pokemon audience, let there be creature collectibles. Each student tames a few pets, say 2 or 3. Aliens or droids.

World of Whills also explores the microbiotic world, a subset of it. It is not just a microbiotic world, however.

Elise and Aetha try to have ordinary lives outside of the prophecy. They are not soldiers. The Force civilizations in the Whills have grown so advanced that there's more role for force sensitives to play than to just be soldiers. So half of each movie is just their ordinary lives while a war rages on just outside of their bubble. But the last one is a full on war.

Elise wants to escape her role in the prophecy, and while the Jedi believe she is the One, the Sith do not; they grant that title to Aetha.

School events include sports, dances, vacations and visiting friends' houses, camping, etc. These all explore the myriad of locations in Star Wars, but from a child/civilian's perspective, like in HP. All different kinds of space food with recipes is introduced. When the older students wander off they seep into the shady alleyways of the Galaxy, full of gangsters and bounty hunters and other exciting unknowns.

The main sport is PODRACING. Elise and Aetha both become experts at it, as they are also great pilots. There is also another sport like Quidditch where you pilot starships in space and a large Death Star like thing and have to use the Force to try to infiltrate enemy goal points, like the Death Star trench run. Maybe make Han do PODRACING while the others do this trench run sport.

Mila's home welcomes Elise, though that family shuns their brother, whom they tell Elise to never get close to, only to treat as a fellow soldier. Mila's home is rundown and poor, like the Weasleys. Aetha visits Hans house and sees a luxurious royal palace.

In the second movie, which explores the second and third years at the academies, Aetha 'stalks' Colt, and accidentally bumps into him when Colt confronts her because he senses she's watching him. Colt is annoyed by her, but pities her when she spills her spaghetti. On the other hand, Krystov and Aetha get along pretty well, as both naturally do not get along well with others. Krystov gets a secret crush on Aetha, which he hides really well as a tsundere. He is a bit jealous that Aetha likes his older friend, Colt, like the rest of the girls. Krystov tells the unkempt Aetha that the prince is out of her league, though he himself does not pursue or open up to her. Krystov and Aetha become very close, and the trio often hang out together. Colt laments that Elise is gone, bothered by the prospect that he has to kill her. Krystov tells Colt to forget about her, displaying that he is easy to cut off friends, though deep inside he does care for Elise. He does not have any romantic feelings towards Elise like Colt does.

On the Sith side, Elise is taken under Mila's wing. Mila tells her to stay away from Grant, as he's very dangerous and is simply a weapon of the Sith, a prisoner. The school is suspicious of her as she's a former Jedi padawan. Elise meets Laurie-5, who wishes to torture her. But Elise shows dominance against Laurie-5, who then submits and begins to question her inner interests. Laurie-5 follows Elise around annoyingly, and proves helpful, making Elise somewhat endeared towards the cyborg maid-assassin that seemed to be programmed out of discombobulated protocol droid parts. In times of need, Elise turns to Laurie-5 for emotional support. Laurie-5 completely does not understand Elise at all and finds her pain humorous, but no one else is willing to listen to Elise's darkest secrets, and only Laurie-5 is sworn to keep a secret after her oath when Elise declared dominance over her with a subtle trick.

While Grant remains at arm's length, a mysterious figure that Elise yearns over, Elise, Laurie-5 and Mila go on adventures together. Mila finds Laurie-5 a curious annoyance, and trolls her, with Laurie-5 not picking up on the hints. Elise often tells Mila to knock it off, and says it's dangerous to mess with fire, as the wrong move could get Laurie-5 into a misunderstanding and have her go after you, possibly straddling you into torture and death. Mila sees Laurie-5 as an amusing appliance or toy, like how people see Cleverbot.

Aetha and Laurie-5 miss one another, and one day, find out how to secretly communicate with one another. This proves a vital plot point, as Aetha uses Laurie-5 to spy on the Sith world she left behind. Then, Aetha and Elise develop a telekinetic Force bond.

Due to various study concentrations, not every student has a lightsaber. Some are sharpshooters, others technicians, others medics.

Maul and Obi Wan are sworn enemies. Obi Wan's sins are passed down to his descendants, and Maul's descendants must cleanse these sins by killing Elise. Later, it is discovered that Colt is not the Chosen Light. Before Colt learns this, he lowers his weapon as he is in clear range of killing Elise, persuaded by Aetha to stop. Colt accidentally stabs Aetha instead, and Elise has to learn how to heal her using her Sith powers.

But when Aetha recovers, she learns that SHE herself is actually the Chosen Light, as Maul's descendants fate is to rid Obi Wan of his mistakes. Obi Wan used a forbidden power to revive both him and Satine; this was considered a selfish act. Obi Wan did this after seeing the happiness Luke and Leia had; he receives a prophetic vision as a force ghost in the Netherworld of his daughter who never came to be due to the meddling of Maul. What Obi Wan did not know was that this was the dark side of the Force tempting him. When Obi Wan is revived, he must go to the living world and handle his mistakes. He ends up saving Elise instead, not giving in to the Jedi who told him he must correct himself.

The main enemies are the dogmatic Jedi and Sith who adhere to the prophecies and want to kill Elise or Colt (and later Aetha). When the Sith learn that it's Aetha who's the Light, they turn against her, telling her family that they must kill their own daughter.

Colt fights Grant, and it ends in a draw. Later, Colt defeats the sadistic head of the Sith academy, thus ending the Sith's forces in the current war, though not the Sith itself; the academy still lives on in secret, as there must be balance to counter the Jedi's dogmatic ways. Elise ends up with Grant, while Aetha ends up with Krystov. Colt finds another girl. Mila dies after being killed by Jedi; this fuels Elise's need for revenge. Sometime later, Elise is able to reach Grant through his love for her. In front of the Jedi, Grant shows the dogmatic Jedi that he is able to change, defying their prophecies. This makes many Jedi feel ashamed, and they are arrested for their crimes to attack those who did not commit any crimes yet. This is what allows them to reach out to Elise to come back to the light. Aetha goes to Elise, fights her, and the two find a balance, ending the war on both sides. At first, Elise does not trust the Jedi and even Grant, saying they are trying to trick her to kill her. But Aetha's bond with her reaches into her heart, and she is able to trust her closest friend. Aetha lays down her weapon, a perfect chance for Elise to kill her. Elise does not, and hugs her instead.

Wedge and Chewbacca's children are also enrolled in Jedi academy. Chewbacca's descendants are friends with Colt. Lando's children are not, but do work elsewhere. A twiik dancer's daughter is in Sith academy, seeking vengeance against the Hutts for what they did to her mother. Tarkin's children are in Sith academy.

Luke's descendants include a young black girl, who is too young to enroll at the Upper academy for ages 14-17, though she visits the Jedi Academy with its headmaster often. In the last movie, when the protagonists are 17, she finally gets in as a first year. Unlike Aetha, who is powerful yet unskilled, she is a child prodigy, mastering talents very quickly. She is very much like Hermoine- very studious, very by the book. But she also has her own 'crackpot' theories that no one seems to listen to; though most are wrong, a few turn out to be right, and her private investigations are crucial for ending the war. She is obsessed with her conspiracy theories but doesn't get angry or annoyed at people who reject them; she just becomes desperate and eager to convince them, never conceding to saying she's wrong, always trying a new approach to convince a non-believer. She inherits Luke's green lightsaber, and builds her own tweaks into it, as she's an inventive tinkerer. She fights the head of the Sith academy with Colt, and together they defeat the nightmarish, otherworldly higher dimensional contraption. Her name is Magyi.

The World of the Whills has its own government. They are beholden to the religion of Mortis. This realm is where the source of the Force lies. The Sith headmaster seeks to take control of it himself, and he requires Elise to destroy the Chosen Light so the hexes preventing him from touching the source is released. If the Chosen Light is killed in any other way, the hexes will not be lifted. Another way to lift it is through the Chosen Light's suicide. If the Chosen Light does not kill the Chosen Dark, then the Light will never be able to access the source. Both Light and Dark seek to control the source to prevent it from falling into the wrong hands. Through the microscopic quantum realm, the Force seeps into all things in the universe. If you visit inside of its microscopic networks, where the laws of physics are turned on its head, you can sever or strengthen its connections.

Aetha's fighting style grows to heavily mirror Maul's acrobatic style, while Elise becomes defensive, like a fortress. These show a yin-yang to the dark and the light. Now, it is the light hunting the dark, while the dark reacts in self-defense.

The Sith headmaster is a trickster deity, and was separated from his light side self, who is also a trickster. His light side self helps the heroes defeat his twin by telling Colt and Magyi his twin's only weakness; he does not grant them any special powers, as no amount of strength can defeat him, only trickery that requires two to work together. The Sith headmaster cast a spell to trick the school that everything is normal, when in actuality, he kills the former Sith headmaster and takes over. Now, his unnatural appearance is not questioned by those within the school, who pledge undying loyalty to him, but those outside of it are confused by him, much to his amusement. This persuasive trickster is lighthearted and makes many jokes, but is also darkly sadistic and merciless. Sometimes, he lets people go due to his chaotic nature, and does not even have a reason why. He just thinks it's funny.

Colt does not get along with his cousin Magyi, finding her conspiracy ramblings distracting and not on track for what she's supposed to do. Colt is wisecracking and laidback, but knows what a soldier's duty is when it comes to work. Magyi, though she enjoys studying, is often huddled in her own work and ignores her assigned duties. They have to learn how to work together as a fighting pair.

Colt finds a Jedi girl, a plain Jane who is not royalty like Elise or Aetha. This plain Jane is homely and down to earth. With no particular talents, she provides emotional support for Colt, setting his morals on the right path and influencing him to not kill Elise, as he listens to his heart instead.

Magyi has no romantic partner yet, as she is too young and has more in life to explore.

Several characters do not relent and change for their friends, however. This ends badly for them. Elise and Aetha must watch their fellow classmates die because they wish to kill them. Laurie-5 is neutral and cares not for allegiances.

(If this doesn't take place hundreds of years later, and is part of the sequel trilogy): Like Dumbledore, Luke sacrifices his life. He takes out the 2nd and 3rd strongest Sith, but realizes that he must die in place of Elise for the Force to be temporarily satisfied, to 'extend' its debt collection of Elise's life. This mirrors how Obi Wan sacrificed himself for Luke. Now, Luke does it for Obi Wan's granddaughter. Obi Wan is moved by his apprentice's death.

Satine had been revived, but died by Sith acting out unintentionally trying to 'balance' the Force. The Force controls things like puppets; the Sith were acting in their own self-interests, but were actually part of something bigger that they did not know about. The Force acts in mysterious ways.

The Wookiee holiday Life Day isn't seen until after the first movie, too risky to bring up that memory too early. There are other holidays. Calm, serene moments like the Binary Sunset, Yoda lifting the Xwing, the scenery on Naboo and Coruscant, etc. These are combined with scenes like Christmas at Hogwarts, Diagon Alley, etc. Lots of astronomical phenomenon not visible on Earth are seen. Characters even fly into them. Should be as imaginative and wild as possible.

Adventures should include light hearted ones that mirror rescuing Leia, where kids can imagine themselves playing some sort of video game while there's triumphant music.

Each student takes a wide variety of courses, but each must declare a master by the end of their first or second year.

Colt's master acts warm towards Elise, but not overtly friendly and self-sacrificial. When he sees Elise alone, he does invite her to join his group of students, and acts hospitable, but is actually trying to spy on her by gauging her reactions. His hidden tests lead to Elise accidentally harming another student, to which she feels guilt and profusely apologizes, fearful that the Jedi would expel her. Deep down, there is something off about him. When he attacks Elise, Elise is unable to get an opening on him and he overwhelms her, but then she is able to use a dark side trick she was chastised on to grab onto him, essentially draining his life force in intuitive, not pre-planned, self-defense.

Now we are assuming this IS the sequel trilogy:

Obi Wan's children were killed trying to protect Elise, who thinks her parents abandoned her. Elise is taken in by Mila's friendly family, who worship the dark side because it has given them so much when they were poor and oppressed; it is sort of like a contract with the devil, a monkey's paw, that ends in Mila's death. Mila is their most beloved, their hope of escaping a treacherous lifetime of servitude. They seek the dark side as empowering independence. Elise can relate to this.

Luke takes in Aetha under his wing. The entire time, unlike most other teachers, he knows she is a fallen Sith, and he hides her identity. Aetha does not know that Luke knows. She is afraid of him at first, but Luke shows her compassion, greatly aiding her embrace of the Light, helping her overcome the numerous mental issues she carries. Aetha seeks revenge, but Luke dissuades her of it.

At the final scene of the first movie, Colt's master confronts both Elise and Aetha. Elise defends Aetha, saying that they won't let him kill the Dark Chosen, as she hasn't fulfilled the prophecy yet. At this point, there is no prophecy saying the Light Chosen must kill the Dark Chosen yet; just that one will bring doom to the other side. But Colt's master reveals that he is not here to kill Aetha, but Elise. Elise kills Colt's master in self-defense. Mila then arrives, and Aetha runs away from her, being chased by Mila's shadowy assassins, though Mila herself does not chase after Aetha.

The second movie reveals both Aetha and Elise's important ancestry. Maul conceived a child during his time serving Sidious. He had thought his lover was dead, and considered her weak. But his lover had actually lived and bore a child, hiding it from Maul. Maul's lover was Sith royalty, living in the World of the Whills; she had run away from the place, wishing to explore the physical realms. Her child was taken back in by her family upon her death, as it was the last conceivable descendant for the woman's parents; the woman was an only child. Though her family has many relatives, her line was the most important direct descendant, as her father was king. Their family detested the Nightsisters and their interpretation of the Sith. They considered their practices sacrilegious.

Aetha hides the color of her saber in a yellow hue; she tries to make it blue, but is unable to, so she has to settle for yellow. She later learns yellow is the color of the Jedi Temple Guard, security ops who operated in secret. She decides that this is a suitable path for her, and enrolls in its program at the Jedi Academy. Grandmaster Luke takes her in as apprentice after the Temple Guards decide they cannot train her, and she continues her training under him as a Temple Guard. When she fights Elise in the second movie, she unsheathes the color and her lightsaber, now dual bladed, adopts the orange hue again. Duel of the fates plays. Elise wins this battle, but before it's decided if she kills Aetha or not, there's an intervention and Aetha crawls her way out.

Magyi fights with a combination of technology and the Force. She's outfitted with various cybernetics and gadgets. She is also into PODRACING, but is not as good as it as Colt, who is a natural. She is more into tinkering with pods than racing, and wishes to beat Colt one day with her mods, though she doesn't even come close.

As mentioned in having a slew of quieter moments, the films explore much of residential life on the planets. It explores both the downtrodden, shady and dangerous with Mila, and space royalty with the Skywalkers. Unlike in Harry Potter, there's no huge conflict about pureblooded or not, but it is a concept that exists. Mila's family is pureblooded, though it is not an exceptional lineage. Grant is just naturally strong, driven also by childhood trauma and meddling by the Sith teachers, while Mila worked her way up. The main conflict is about protecting the source of the Force, and the interpretation of both Jedi and Sith philosophies, extremely similar to the other sequel trilogies I've brainstormed.

Luke's wife is dark skinned, and his daughter-in-law is also dark skinned. Magyi's father, and Luke's son, works as a famous chef hologram personality, using the Force to make incredible dishes. Colt's father is a black sheep of the family; he turned to the dark side, so Leia and Han rarely speak of their son. Colt's father plays the role of Sirius Black to Elise.

Aetha manages to befriend a popular Twi'lek girl whom she thought didn't like her. The popular girl finds her amusing, and admits she only befriended her because she finds Temple Guard training boring and needed something entertaining. Aetha is offended by this. The girl's family is nothing spectacular, and she chose to be a Temple Guard because her lightsaber, too, couldn't be anything but yellow, so she just went with it. The girl is very nice and doesn't really know how she got popular, as it just happened the moment she entered the school due to her attractiveness. She's not very charismatic and has a very 'normal' personality, and is very studious at studying, though not overly obsessed. She is a year younger than Aetha, despite being much taller. She talked to Aetha first after witnessing Aetha's 'cute' stumblings in class. Her name is Kaita. The two become close, but don't consider each other best friends like Aetha does with Krystov, Colt and even Elise (whom she contacts remotely via Force Bond, like a penpal). Kaita often hangs out with her popular groups so she doesn't get to hang out with Aetha a lot. The popular kids think Kaita is weird for hanging out with Aetha, so they mask their relationship most of the time and ignore one another in public, mainly talking during their shared classes.

While Luke lives in the World of the Whills, Leia acts as an important ambassador from the outside realms to the Whills. Though the outside galaxy is recovering well from the Empire, the government of the Whills- an unstable network of monarchies with shifty allegiances- is in turmoil.

Krystov is stocky but normal height, while Colt and Grant are both very tall built but lanky (like basketball players or swimmers), with Colt slightly taller by a few centimeters, mostly due to Grant's rebellious slouch. Elise is of average height, still taller than Aetha, who is very very short and often has trouble fitting in her robes and Sith attire. Mila is slightly taller than Elise. Kaita is the tallest, like a volleyball player.

Lots of colorful lights on planet skies, making for good scenery during city visits, camping and holidays.

The end of the second movie shows an attack on one of the academies by the other. In the third movie, both girls are still in school, but now they are not completely safe within its confines.

In the first movie, Elise hears about how the Chosen Light has a healing power no one else has, and the Chosen Dark has a destructive power. When Elise heals, she thinks it's because of that power. But after Colt's master reveals the truth to her, and that the rest of the Jedi calvary are coming to back up him to kill her, she realizes it's the opposite.
